Resolutions, Platform, and Constitution of the Republican Association of Washington, Disunion of Gadsdenites.

WASHINGTON, THURSDAY, Aug. 16.

Whereas, by the repeal of the eighth section of the act for the admission of Missouri into the Union, the territories of Kansas and Nebraska have been opened to the introduction of Slavery, and all the compromises, real or imaginary, upon that subject, are thus violated and annulled, and deep sickness inflicted upon the age in which we live.

Now, therefore, in conjunction with all those throughout the land who oppose this and other similar measures, which we deem to be contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, and which are designed to consummate purposes Slavery, we do associate ourselves together, under the name and title of the Republican Association of Washington, D. C.

And we adopt the following as our political platform, to wit:

First. That Congress possesses no power over the institution of Slavery in the several States; but that, outside of State jurisdiction, the constitutional powers of the Federal Government should be exerted to secure life, liberty and happiness to all men; and therefore,

Second. There should be neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime, in any of the territories of the United States.

Third. The people are the rightful source of all political power; and all officers should, as far as practicable, be chosen by a direct vote of the people.

Fourth. Candidates for political offices should be men of undoubted integrity and sobriety, and pledged to support the principles of this platform by all lawful and constitutional means.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. I. Any person may become a member of this Association on subscribing to its Platform and Constitution.

ART. II. The officers of the Association shall be a President, Vice Presidents, three Directors, Treasurer, Recording Secretary and Corresponding Secretary, who shall serve until such a day as the Association shall appoint, or the time for the annual meeting; then and thereafter annually, to be elected annually.

ART. III. The three directors, with the President, Secretaries and Treasurer, shall constitute a Committee to attend to the proper distribution of such funds as may be placed at their disposal by the Association, and to perform such other duties as may from time to time be assigned them.

ART. IV. The funds of the Association shall be devoted exclusively to the payment of the necessary contingent expenses of the same, for the purchase and circulation of such documents and information, and in the use of such means as may have a tendency to advance the principles and objects of our principles.

ART. V. In order to secure unanimity of action, the more direct interchange of intelligence, and general co-operation throughout the country, we invite the formation of a similar Association in any State, county, city or village, in the Union, whose officers shall be regular members of this Association, and who are required to report to this Association the names of their officers and number of members, for general information of the whole.

ART. VI. This Association may at any time, as a mark of respect, elect to the office of Honorary Vice-President, or to honorable membership, any distinguished or influential gentleman, whether a resident or non-resident, provided he be known to favor our platform and constitution.

ART. VII. This constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any of its regular meetings.

Massachusetts Republican Convention.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, Aug. 16.

The Republican or Fusion meeting in Chapman's Hall to-day is quite fully attended. Among the prominent persons present are Hon. Samuel Hoar, F. S.; Charles Francis Adams, F. S.; Hon. James Durfee, Whig; N. H. Dana, F. S., and others. Rev. C. Cleaveland, of Stockbridge, presides. Among the Vice Presidents are ex-Governor Boutwell, Dist.; Lieutenant Governor Brown, K. N., and John W. Foster, K. N.

The meeting continued in session until late in the afternoon. Speeches were made by SAMUEL HOAR, of Concord; JAMES H. DUNCAN, of Haverhill; RICHARD H. DANA, [illegible]

[illegible] Slavery.

Resolved, That we invite to this and their should be an early meeting of the people of this Commonwealth in Mass Convention.

A committee of one from each county, with SAMUEL HOAR as chairman, was appointed for consultation with political organizations, and to call a Mass State Convention in favor of the fusion movement at an early day.

The meeting, though not numerously attended, was highly respectable in character and quite enthusiastic.

Relief for the Sufferers from Yellow Fever.

PHILADELPHIA, THURSDAY, Aug. 16.

A meeting of merchants was held in the Exchange at noon to-day, for the purpose of adopting measures for the relief of the sufferers from yellow fever in Norfolk, Portsmouth, &c.

A Committee of fifty was appointed to solicit subscriptions for the sufferers.

BALTIMORE, THURSDAY, Aug. 16.

The Norfolk papers of the 14th inst. state that NAUM TAYLOR, Chief Inspector of the Navy-yard, is dead. HUNTER WOODS, Mayor of the City, ill—and Dr. SYLVESTER dying. The fever has extended from the infected district to the upper part of Norfolk. T. G. BRENGMAN, Jr., son of the editor of the Herald is in a dying state. There is great difficulty in getting nurses, and ten dollars per night is charged.

There are not more than 1,500 people now in Portsmouth. Col. JOHN HARPER, JOHN B. DAVIS and NATHANIEL MANNING, are among the dead. Many other prominent citizens are ill.

Three thousand dollars were contributed by the meeting, and provisions were purchased and dispatched by the boat for Norfolk to-night.

Yellow Fever in Virginia—Sloop-of-War Hunter Condemned.

BALTIMORE, THURSDAY, Aug. 16.

The Portsmouth papers, as late as due, in to hand.

There were four deaths from yellow fever at Norfolk during the twenty-four hours ending at noon on Wednesday, and the disease had somewhat abated. Captain BARRON was convalescent, but his daughter continued very low. Captain JAMES HENDERSON was in a dying state.

The deaths at Portsmouth have averaged eight per day.

The sloop-of-war Marion has returned home without waiting for orders from the Navy Department, as she has been condemned as unseaworthy.

Maryland Democratic Convention.

BALTIMORE, THURSDAY, Aug. 16.

Our State Democratic Convention to-day nominated W. W. BOWIE, of Prince George's County, for State Comptroller, and GEORGE GALE, of Kent County, for Lottery Commissioner.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Gov. Reeder and the Administration—The Yellow Fever at the South—Departure of the President—Gov. Wise and Virginia.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1855.

We may expect some interesting disclosures from Governor REEDER on his return to the East, and if a public reception be given him at New-York, his speech will probably occasion a deeper excitement at Washington than his confirmation of the charges against the Missouri mob in the speech at Easton. Gov. REEDER possesses the proofs that he was directed by the Administration to postpone the election for members of the Territorial Legislature, to such a time as would be most favorable to the colonization of voters from Missouri; and it is alleged that information was given to the leaders of the gang that such orders had been sent to Kansas. A part of these expected revelations relate to the land speculations. Governor REEDER never made a secret of his intended purchases here or anywhere, and it is freely admitted that he would never have been questioned as to their propriety, had he consented to commission all the legislative candidates fraudulently returned for seats. Not only were these speculations known in Washington, but [illegible] very high [illegible] of the Administration [illegible] some of these [illegible] in the Superior City speculation on Lake Superior. It need occasion no surprise if it should turn out that SHANNON, the new Governor, was a partner in both enterprises, for though I am not aware of any specific facts bearing out the suspicion, I know that he was the constant and intimate associate of the speculators in Superior corner lots.

The fever at Portsmouth and Norfolk has produced a general panic along the Chesapeake and Potomac, and those water courses communicating with the infected places. The terror has reached even Washington, unquestionably one of the healthiest places in the Union. There has been a general evacuation of the small towns below us for the mountains and the North—never has the political capital, within my recollection, been more completely deserted, and I cannot help perceiving that the fear of pestilence has its share in driving away our residents, and keeping away visitors, though there never was less occasion for apprehension.

The President has left with Senator MASON for the Sulphur baths, and it was only judicious in him to do so. The location of the White House has long been noted for its insalubrity. The thick and murky political atmosphere which surrounds it, has perhaps its influence in attracting and condensing the poisonous vapors from the shoal in front, which at low water is little better than a marsh. This malaria cannot be safely breathed during August and September, and a life so precious as that of Gen. PIERCE should surely be guarded against unnecessary risk.

The beauty of the situation of the White House, and its general suitableness for an Executive residence, are admitted, but in view of its liability to typhus and bilious fevers, a mansion within the district adapted for residence during the sickly season ought to be built. The suggestion has often been made, and the subject will be urged upon Congress during the forthcoming session. The cost of the new Versailles or Windsor need not exceed half a million of dollars, and Congress will cheerfully provide the means. Speculators are already busily canvassing the chances of a good thing in these necessary expenditures, and the prices of all eligible locations out of town have gone up accordingly.

While the Richmond Enquirer is devising the ways and means of taking Virginia out of the Union by means of iron roads, and other modifications of cold iron, in hissing editorials, Mr. WISE is seeking to anchor her therein by "honey-fugling"—a Tuckahoe equivalent for blarneying—letters to the New-York Bamburners. Now the Bamburners, you know, are or were Free-Soilers, and in Virginia a Free-Soiler is an Abolitionist. Of course so serious a slip was instantly noticed by the Anti-Abolition journals of Virginia, that is by all of them, and the Governor elect was called upon in one general scream of astonishment to explain himself. This he does in a very moderate and unwise-like manner, by saying that he did not know his New-York correspondents were Abolitionists, and that by-gones had better be by-gones. This little episode clearly enough shows that WISE is in training for the Presidency, and is the first open indication of the smothered feud between his partisans and those of Senator HUNTER, who has also been entered for competition.

I have heretofore predicted, and I renew the prophecy, that WISE, as Governor, will give the Virginia democracy more trouble than any of his predecessors, and that when they caught that distinguished convert from Whiggery and Tylerism, they caught a Tartar.

It appears probable that Mr. CULLOM, of Tennessee, a Know-Nothing Whig, has been beaten by Col. SAVAGE, a Democrat, who also professed Know-Nothingism, but seceded. This is to be deeply regretted. Gen. CULLOM is a bold, eloquent, and just man, and was looked upon as the best surviving representative of the old Whig spirit of Tennessee. Col. SAVAGE will prove himself an uncompromising Democrat, and all the more so because he has been compromised by Know-Nothingism.

HARVEST REPORTS.

From Tapper & McKillop's Commercial Agency, No. 20 Nassau-street.

INDIANA.

WHITE COUNTY.—The crops of all kinds in this county are better than they have been for ten years. The corn and wheat crops especially are very fine, and the planting was unusually large.

ST. JOSEPH'S COUNTY.—The damage done to outstanding wheat by the protracted rain and heat, although very serious, is not so bad as anticipated. Corn is doing finely. A large amount of wheat was put in, and this valley will furnish a large surplus.

OHIO.

KNOX COUNTY.—Oats and hay the very best. Corn good. Wheat more than an average crop. Potatoes in abundance.

PUTNAM COUNTY.—The wheat is gathered, and is an extraordinary yield for the quantity sown, which was, however, unusually small, say one-third of the ordinary number of acres. I am satisfied, however, it will yield an average of double the usual amount to the acre. Owing to the long and heavy rains in the months of June and July, corn will not be as good as usual; and unless frost holds off late, this crop will fall considerably short of our expectations; still there will be a large surplus. Oats never were as good, and an abundant crop has been harvested. The above are our staple products.

ASHTABULA COUNTY.—This is a dairy and stock county mainly, though the amount *of wheat is in*creasing, and very good this year. All crops are *quite satisfactory. The pastures are in fine condi*tion, and the Fall crop of butter and cheese will be large. Corn is the poorest crop; some fields are very uneven, others are uncommonly fine, and the average will be a good crop.

LAKE COUNTY.—A stock and dairy county chiefly, and all in small farms. Crops of all kinds are unusually good this year, and like New-England farmers all will have something to sell. Corn, oats, potatoes, wool, butter, cheese and cattle will be abundant and cheap. Hay and pasturage never were better. The damage done by rain in this County is comparatively trifling.

GRANGE COUNTY.—This is mostly a stock raising and dairy county, producing cheese, wool, beef, &c.

Crops this year uncommonly good; grass and hay seldom as good. Oats very heavy. Fruit abundant. Potatoes three times the usual quantity planted, and the prospect could hardly be better.

Corn will be the poorest crop; it has been late and backward all the season, and is in many fields very uneven—it will be a medium crop.

ARKANSAS.

INDEPENDENCE COUNTY.—The prospects of the growing crop are of the most flattering character. Should the favorable season continue, the yield will be unprecedented. The harvest of corn and wheat will be very large. Cotton will be over an average.

NEW-YORK.

*GENESEE COUNTY—AUBURN.—The crops gen*erally are good. Wheat has been somewhat in*jured by rains, but is now being harvested in better* order than was anticipated. The yield is large for this County, and will be but little depreciated in value. Barley is an average crop. Oats very large. Corn not as good as usual on account of wet weather. Potatoes, a large crop if not rotten. Some fears of rot. On the whole the farmers of this County will do well this year.

GENOA.—Crops were never better in this section, with the exception of corn, which has suffered from the heat and excessive rains, but still will be a fair crop. In oats, wheat and barley we have an abundant yield. Apples will be a fair crop, but not excessive. Peaches a total failure. In some localities potatoes already show indications of disease. Wheat is nearly all secured in good condition.

DUTCHESS COUNTY.—The harvest in this county promises to yield a much larger return for the labors of the husbandman than usual, excepting wheat, which was almost entirely killed by the Winter, and what was left was finished by the Hessian fly. Part of the rye crop has been injured from five to ten per cent. by the wet weather. It will be good for distilling purposes, though not for bread. Oats heavy, and mostly gathered. Hay, corn and potatoes promise an abundant yield. Hay somewhat damaged by the last year's drouth.

TENNESSEE.

ONION COUNTY.—The wheat crop of this year doubles any previous crop per acre, making an average of eighteen or twenty bushels per acre. The prospect of the corn crop is extraordinary—promising an unparalleled yield.

Williams College Commencement.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Tuesday, Aug. 14, 1855.

The exercises of Commencement week at Williams opened on Sabbath afternoon, with President HOPKINS' Baccalaureate. It was one of his most able and eloquent efforts. He discoursed from the text: "Perfect love casteth out fear." The sermon will probably be published by the Graduating Class.

In the evening, Prof. SMITH, of Union Theological Seminary, delivered the annual discourse before the Mills Theological Society. He aimed to show the adaptedness of Christianity for universal diffusion. We have not space in which to convey a just idea of the performance, except by saying that it was worthy of the man and the subject.

On Monday evening, DODWORTH'S Band gave a concert, which was largely attended. All Monday and the day following, graduates poured in, until there is hardly room enough left in the town for another person.

On Tuesday morning, the Alumni met in the Chapel to the number of two hundred or over. No business was transacted, except the reading of obituaries of those who have died during the past year. The announcement of the decease of Jos S. OLIN, Esq., called forth eulogiums from many members of his class. The Alumni are to meet again, and take action with regard to Col. WILLIAMS' monument and the Mills Park.

At 2 P. M. the new Natural History building was "dedicated," of which more anon.

At 3 P. M. the Alumni again assembled to listen to the orator and poet of the day. The orator was T. S. WHITE, Esq., of Lowell; poet, E. W. B. CANNING, Stockbridge. The subject of the oration was "the Life and Character of Colonel WILLIAMS," from whom the College received name and foundation. A deeply interesting account was given of Col. WILLIAMS' part in the struggles of the Revolution, and of his magnanimous efforts to aid the cause of education in West ern Massachusetts. An eloquent appeal was made by the orator in behalf of the WILLIAMS monument enterprise.

The Poem was equal to the average of such productions on such occasions. It breathed something of poetic fire, and much of filial reverence and affection for Alma Mater.

Tonight we have Prize Declamation and an address before the Adelphic Union, by Rev. H. W. BEECHER. This is a Union of the two Literary Societies, the Philologian and Philolexterian. The newly chosen President from the class of '56 is CHARLES WHITTIER, of Haverhill, Mass. F. P.

NEW-YORK CITY.

New Buildings—Banks, Stores, &c.

It is perhaps not a bad sign of the times that there are five Banks in progress of erection, just now, in Wall-street and neighborhood. The Bank of the State of New-York, lately commenced at the corner of William street and Exchange-place, is already in a forward state. It is a large and handsome white marble building of the Elizabethan style. Judging from the architectural skill and taste displayed in the first story, the windows of which are adorned with very fine specimens of statuary, it is not too much to expect that when completed it will be one of the most elegant and classic structures in that part of the City.

The building in course of erection on the corner of Wall and Water streets, is also designed for a bank; and when finished will be a handsome pile. The front will be composed of what is called Caen Stone—a species of mica imported from Normandy in France. It is this same kind of stone that has been used for the interior of the Parliament Houses in London. It is of a light yellow color—semi-transparent—so soft that it may be easily cut with a knife; and susceptible of a high polish.

The old Mechanics' Bank on Wall-street, opposite the Union Bank, has lately been pulled down in order to be replaced by a more elegant and substantial building to be devoted to the same purpose. Little more than the laying of the foundation of the new edifice has yet been done; but there are abundant hands at work on it; and it is expected that the mason work at least will be ready before the middle of September.

Messrs. DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co. are getting up a magnificent banking house on the corner of Nassau and Pine streets. It is already in quite an advanced state, having reached the third or, we believe, fourth story. When finished it will be seven stories. It is being built in the Italian style—the front consisting of the finest quality of Jersey sandstone. Like the other buildings just referred to, it is to be entirely fire-proof; and among other ornaments intended for the interior is a splendid white marble staircase, which is to reach nearly to the top.

The new Bank of Commerce has been commenced on the corner of Nassau and Cedar streets. Our Reporter endeavored to obtain some information from the "boss" or deputy boss in charge of the workmen there, but to vain. His (rather curious) reply was that the papers were too much in the habit of publishing new buildings; but that if our Reporter would promise to "show up" this, he would give all the information he could on the subject. Instead of receiving any such promise he was respectfully asked how he would like it if while endeavoring to make [illegible] his duty, [illegible] forts were disappointed [illegible] and, was to be his first proposition, not a word would be tell. It seems that it the will of this "boss" were consulted, our description would run somewhat in the style of BURNS—such as,

"Windows and doors in nameless sculpture drest,
With order, symmetry, or taste, unblest;
Forms like some bedlam's stationary's dream,
The crazed creation of misgivided whim."

On the corner of Broadway and Cedar-street, west side of the former, the Messrs. WALDO & Co. are getting up a splendid store. The first story, composed chiefly of iron, is already built, and gives earnest of a beautiful as well as substantial whole. Nearly opposite—on Broadway—Mr. J. REINHARDER is building another very handsome store, the mason-work of which is nearly finished.

The improvement of Park-place goes steadily on. A very handsome store, five stories high, with brown front, is nearly finished on the north side of the street, between Broadway and Church-street; and a somewhat similar building has just been commenced on the south side, near Broadway.

Mr. P. HUNT is erecting a magnificent white marble store on his corner of Church-street and Park-place, opposite the College. Another mammoth marble store has been commenced by Mr. L. CHITTENDEN, on College-place, which is to occupy the whole block from Park-place to Barclay-street. There are several other buildings, of more or less note, being erected in the same neighborhood.

Filthy Condition of Some of the Lower Wards—The Paving—The Houses, &c.

The lower part of the City east of Broadway, Chatham street and East Broadway, between Coenties-slip and Grand-street, is still in a very filthy condition. Water-street has never been very clean; it is rather proverbial for being otherwise; but we doubt whether it was ever dirtier, even under the auspices of Mr. ARCULARIUS, than it is at present. The sinks, on each side, almost throughout its whole extent, are choked up with heaps of mud and garbage, and where there is not an accumulation of dirt there are obstructions, such as old carts, wagons, boxes, &c., which render it almost impassable.

Front-street is pretty much the same, although in the main it is not quite so bad. That both are sadly neglected, at all events, is very evident. If the public scavengers ever give them a "rub" at all, it must be a very light one; and there's some reason to think that many of those who do business or live in these streets, are rather indifferent also, as to their condition.

The paving in Front-street is rapidly giving way—sinking into unsightly holes. Indeed, most of the houses appear to be a good deal the worse for the wear too; not a few of them are so crazy to all appearance, that they would be sure to fall if they had only room to do so. The sooner a large number of them are pulled down and replaced by new ones, the better.

Pine-street is well enough paved, but it appears as if the sweeping-machines, or indeed any other cleansing apparatus, had never been in the lower part of it. It is one of the narrowest streets in that section of the City, but it contains obstructions enough for the widest. It would appear as if all those old carts had been gathered into it on purpose to block it up.

But who could expect to find Maiden-lane dirty? Yet so it is, between William and Water streets; and it is more obstructed in the same locality than almost any other street in the vicinity.

Bad as all these are, however, they may be regarded almost as clean compared to Cherry and Dover streets. As for the former, the wonder is how those who live in the worst part of it can be healthy. For example, the stench between James-slip and Catharine-street, is all but intolerable. It is really sickening to inhale the atmosphere of this filthy locality. It is the most neglected of all the streets our reporter has hitherto passed through in his tour of inspection. The paving, too—if such it can be called—is very bad, full of holes containing garbage, &c. Judging from a large heap of paving stones, in the very centre of the street between Oliver and Catharine streets, it seems to be in contemplation in some quarter to pave it anew; but when the thing is to be actually commenced—whether before or after Christmas—our reporter tried in vain to learn.

Next to Cherry-street, in filthy prominence, is Dover street. Like the former, it contains numerous stagnant pools and heaps of vegetable matter in different stages of decomposition. Here and there are heaps of mud, which appear to have been gathered with the design of having them removed; but they must have been there now for weeks; and they are a far greater nuisance at this moment than when their contents were first collected.

There are several other streets in the same neighborhood which, although not quite so filthy as those indicated, are in all conscience, sufficiently so to render it necessary that they be immediately cleansed. Whose business is it—or is it nobody's—to remove all this filth?

A Shabby Building—Essex Market Police Court.

Of all the rascally old rookeries that disgrace the town—considering the uses to which it is put—possesses the Essex Market Police Court-room is the most wretched. The proposition for a new building, comprising jointly a Police Court and County Jail, has just passed the Board of Council, twice, and is now before the other Board. It has been reported upon favorably, and now stands recommitted, with a view to more extended examination of the subject. Meanwhile, at the Session on Tuesday evening Justice BOSWORTH sent in an invitation to the members to visit the locality and examine the building and facilities afforded for Court examinations, as also the accommodations for prisoners. The invitation was accepted, but whether the Board or even a Committee of that body will ever show themselves there is another thing. The building used as the Essex Market Police Court is comparatively a sturdy affair enough. Old and dilapidated, dirty, musty, it has become a receptacle not only unsafe for the health of the officials permanently attached to it, but absolutely perilous to the lives of the prisoners. Formerly, as is well known, it was used as a market—the vegetable branch of the old Essex Market. From a market it was converted to its present use. Some dozen years since, on the occasion of the removal of the Third-street Police Court, as it was then called, to the corner of Bowery and Third-street, it underwent very through repairs, but even then was far from being a suitable building and suitably arranged for the purposes of a Police Court and Station-House. But it has continued to be occupied as such, in the forlorn hope, from year to year, of being reconstructed or remodeled, till now nothing is left but the barest cuelogy for a decent building. The roof is leaky—the walls are peeled of their plaster in many places—the floors are rough, and the cells, without exception, miserably damp and unwholesome. For lack of a connection with the sewer, the odor of the rear premises is intolerable, and yet into its filthy cells are often crowded sixty prisoners at one time.

The room devoted to examinations, has not a chance of communing with the outer air. It is to be hoped the Board of Aldermen will make up and rapidly concur in the adoption of the plans before them, if they are good ones, or draw out others if they are not; a new building is demanded immediately.

The Street Commissioner.

A Street "Commissioner" for our City has a legitimate salary of $2,500 yearly. But inasmuch as men who enjoy that berth are very apt to come out rich, however poor they may go in, it is presumed that something more than the legitimate fees are treasured up by its holder. Indeed, we suspect that the temptations to get rich hastily are so strong upon the occupant of the office, that it would be wise for all men who value honesty before money, and a clean conscience before wealth, earnestly to pray that they be delivered from the temptations of a Street Commissioner. It has a great deal of patronage—its emoluments are vast, and the hankerers after it are "Legion." The truth is, this office has not been carefully enough watched. The public morals demand that every public servant who occupies a position of trust should be watched closely, especially when such jobs have come to light under his administration as the Yorkville street-grading matter. At the coming Fall election it must be decided who will be the next incumbent—who shall be the next one to get fat contracts for somebody and shamefully bad bargains for the City by means of this position; and yet—it shames us to say it, but it is true—that our voting will have very little to do with the matter. The primary elections settle the whole thing, so far as to determine that one of two or three or four men must have it; and on election day we go up, and if we have any wisdom left, choose the least corruptible or corrupt one of the lot, and help elect him. It is a sad story to tell outsiders, but it is true.

Obstructions in the Streets.

Several of our wholesale business streets are almost continually blocked up with boxes, bales, carts, &c. The sidewalks on Liberty-street, between Broadway and Nassau-street, are scarcely ever free from obstructions of this character, and this, as everybody knows, is the principal route to the Post-Office from the Western part of the City. Very often huge boxes which cover the flags on each side, are entirely empty, although appearing for obvious reasons, to be full. These quasi consignments have generally long nails or pieces of lath projecting from them, ready to destroy any garment male, or female, that happens to come in contact with them, as many a lady and gentleman know to their cost.

Cortlandt-street has lately become rather noted for similar obstructions; also John, Dye and Barclay streets. The north side of Barclay, between Broadway and Church-street, is often so crowded with boxes and bales that numbers passing to and from the Sixth and Eighth avenue cars are obliged to cross over to the other side of the street, or run the risk of having their garments torn; and it not unfrequently happens that parts of this side are just as bad. Is it not somebody's business to look after these things? Merchants who have so little consideration as thus to impede our thoroughfares, ought to be taught that the sidewalks were not made for their exclusive use, whether their object be mere display for advertising purposes or simply a matter of convenience.

The Carnival of the Bugs.

The Palaces on Fifth-avenue are closed to all human beings at this season, and open only to cockroaches and Croton-water bugs. Indeed, now is the Bug Carnival in the mansions of the wealthy. No house can be so tastefully constructed, or so elaborately ornamented in this town, that its owner can afford to stay by it through the month of August. Fashion takes our aristocracy by the nose and shrugs them into the much lamented place, entirely at her will.

CITY POLITICS.

Election of Delegates to Soft Shell State Convention.

The Soft Shells of this City elected last evening some of their Delegates to their State Convention at Syracuse. We assort the returns:

First District.—Election to be held on the 20th inst.

Second District.—Election to be held on the 20th inst.

Third District.—Wm. Beard, Joseph Rose, John Smith.

Fourth District.—Delegates—Henry E. Hickman, John Creighton. Alternates—Samuel Roughton, Harrison Smith.

Fifth District.—Delegates—William Russell, James Murphy. Alternates—Wm. Cayce, Daniel Gainey.

Sixth District.—Delegates—Benj. West, E. W. S. Bennell.

Seventh District.—Delegates—Joseph D. Beckwith, John Richardson. Alternates—Wm. Vallance, Thomas Hulse.

Eighth District.—Delegates—Simeon Mallory, Henry H. Johnson.

Ninth District.—Delegates—Hiram Eagle, John Foster.

Tenth District.—Election to be held on 20th inst.

Eleventh District.—Delegates—Francis B. O'Hearn, Edward McCormell. Alternates—John Gay, Henry Lewis.

Twelfth District.—Delegates—John Kelley, Andrew H. Green. Alternates—James W. Smith, John Pratt.

Thirteenth District.—Delegates—John Van Buren, John D. Ryer. Alternates—John E. Rose, Jr., B. W. Norris.

Fifteenth District.—Delegates—John Cochrane, Geo. H. Rose.

The elections were harmonious. Opposition tickets were run but in a few of the Wards, and they polled but a very few votes. Few of the delegates elected are known out of the Wards in which they reside. JOHN VAN BUREN and James COCHRANE are the only men of note among them. All the delegates are, we believe, hostile to the Maine Law, and they will of course nominate men for State offices likely to secure the support of the Liquor Sellers. Indeed the Softs admit that their only hope of success rests upon their winning the votes of the party of which Col. FRENCH is the Great Magul.

The Industrial School in Eighth-ward.

NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, Aug. 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

[illegible] yesterday morning, I attended at [illegible] Hall, Lamartine Hall, cor. Clay and Eighth-avenue and Twenty-third-street, to see the recent work in dressing the children of the Industrial School. I am at a loss to comprehend, or to give any information in regard to it to any call on my part, either in the morning or afternoon, for several times, and too far from the residence of the School either, and is in a place [illegible] with an average attendance of from 100 to 150 scholars. It was [illegible] to have a [illegible] School commenced with the Outcast Children, as I [illegible] have easily been made aware, either by applying to any of the officers of the School, or by reference to their printed circulars [illegible] distribution, by-laws, and system of operation. There is connected with the School an Industrial Committee, whose business it is to provide means to make up clothing, &c., for the vagrant and poor children, and encourage them into the Public Schools, thereby avoiding the expense of a separate day-school. For the information of J. H. or any others who may take an interest in the matter, I would refer them to the following gentlemen: James Bowne, No. 70 Jane-street; Wm. Hitchcock, M.D., No. 203 Eighth-street; James Anderson, No. 100 West Twenty-second-street; Wm. Cheney, corner Twenty-ninth-street and Eighth-avenue; Rev. E. R. McGregor, No. 203 West Twenty-eighth-street; Wm. B. Mackrell, Superintendent, No. 199 West Twenty-second-street.

T. W. C.

When does They?

MR. EDITOR: When does [illegible] and ventilated on one side? I asked the same in a store to-day, and was told they were "[illegible]." Are they potassetta, or are they to carry in meeting?

Yours, inquiringly, LUCY ANN.

LUCY ANN, the cake you speaked in composed principally of flour, salt and soda. They taste like crackers salted beyond all reason. They would make a Yankee child sick, or an adult Yankee "dry as a bone." Hence their value; for you know Germans never tire of their lager bier. But they would tire, and the liquor would pall down their throats utterly unappreciated, unless when full to the brim some persuasive would give their drowsy appetites new vigor. Here comes in the cake. The drinker eats a little and coins out Kin and the keg is tapped again, and off he starts on a new round; and so you see it is a very valuable cake—that curious varnished loaf—not equal in potent even to the permanency of a national bank.

Ho, There! Your Promise!

The Union Ferry Company are as deaf as an adder. Not a word do they hear. They go straight on, with demure faces, taking our twopence for every crossing, precisely the same as if they had not promised and resended it that the day the price of coal came down they would return to the penny fares. Coal is down—low enough for the people. Now, gentlemen, your promise. Down with your fares, or confess that you break faith.

Going—Gone.

Very many of our Councilmen, and a quorum, we think, of the Aldermen, have quit our town and its "cutequirs." Both Boards have adjourned over to the 1st of September, hence the Hegira. Mayor WOOD, we believe, remains—probably he is making up that list of appointees to the Police Department, with their trades and professions—that list which it was thought he did not like to furnish.

Peas Sufferers by the Yellow Fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth.

A conference meeting will be held at No. 12 Insurance Building, (front room, second story,) corner of Wall and William streets, at 1 P. M. to-day, Friday, Aug. 17, for the purpose of consulting upon the measures of relief for the poor sufferers by the yellow fever visitation at Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport, Va. All those friendly to the measure are requested to attend at that hour.

E. MERRIAM.

Fire.

The five-story brick building, No. 96 Crosby-street, and its contents, was damaged by fire to the amount of about $600, at 2½ o'clock Wednesday morning. The loss is covered by insurance. The origin of the fire has not been ascertained.

At 2 o'clock yesterday morning a fire was discovered in No. 17 Canal-street, occupied as a saw-mill and turning-shop, which was extinguished with trifling damage.

Brutal Outrage.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

On Friday last a gentleman belonging to the City of Churches passing down Broadway carrying a handsome picture, hailed an omnibus at APPLETONS' bookstore; the driver stopped, and as he was stepping up some well dressed men and women raised their feet to prevent his entering, so that he lost his balance and was thrown down, dirtying his clothes with the black mud and bruising his person so as to cause lameness for several days. The names of the above persons are not known.

A BAD BOOK OVERRATED.

MANY [illegible] as a Lion. As Mary Lyndon claims to be a veritable autobiography, we are to regard it, not as a work of fiction in autobiographic form, but as an unvarnished narrative of the life of the woman who wrote it. Upon her own showing, she has had an unpleasant time of it. In many respects she has been more fortunate than three-fourths of womankind;—in others she has had, perhaps, rather more of sorrow than the other fourth. But she has made most lamentable use alike of her blessings and her afflictions. Her woman's nature has derived nothing of refinement from the one or of benefaction through the other. She was naturally, as we judge from her book, a woman of strong passions, coarse tastes, violent temper and unbounded self-conceit. Her experience of life has sharpened her intellect, exasperated her temper, inflamed her sensual appetites, augmented vastly her self-conceit, and made her too fold more the "child of hell" she naturally was before. She has written this book apparently for a double purpose,—first, for the sake of indulging in the luxury of a public crying-spell, garnished with groans and hysterical shrieks, over the wrongs she has suffered and the wretchedness she has endured;—and second, for the purpose of convincing the world of the advantages of hydropathy, the abominations of Christianity, and the reforming influence of free and free dispositions. We have seen floating about our country exchanges a preliminary part of her book, credited to the columns of the DAILY TIMES. If any such notice ever did appear in our columns it was without the Editor's knowledge, and certainly did not express his opinions. But whether published or not, we propose now to relieve ourselves of all responsibility for the popularity of the book, by a clear and unmistakable statement of the judgment we have formed of its character and influence.

Mary Lyndon was originally an infant—unhappy in having a mother who did not understand Hygiene and Social Science, but doubly blessed in her father, who was at once the son of a Scotchman and an Infidel. She was sickly, unhappy, sick, and wanted now and then, at an early age, to commit suicide. She had a handsome sister, who fell ill, became religious and died. She fell in with a Teacher, whose sneers at Christianity pleased and delighted her,—came under the influence of a Quaker family,—became a Quaker herself,—taught school,—agreed, at the urgent request of her uncle, to marry a Quaker, towards whom she felt upon her first meeting a "deep and most decided aversion,"—fell passionately in love with a young man whom "Fate threw in her path,"—married the Quaker, and spent her after life in torturing herself and hating him. Under her artistic portraiture, which is very likely to be untrue, he seems to have been a stupid, heartless, wooden-headed creature, treating her with great harshness, and having not the remotest conception of sentiment or feeling himself. Mary Lyndon, or rather Mrs. Hervey, was at this period of her life thoroughly unhappy;—and no doubt there are thousands of women who marry as unthinkingly and as stupidly as she did. Many of them, pierced as her heart by their misery, and lacking that great capacity of endurance which is the true heroism of the female character, shrink under their sorrow and find refuge in an early grave. Others, with greater fortitude, offer to the blow the meek resistance of silence, and gradually harden to the trial, or resign themselves to it, as to a [illegible] they hoped to call a home, and take refuge, shrinkingly and fearfully, in some secluded and secure retreat. Mrs. Hervey did neither. Profoundly convinced of the utter impossibility of her having done anything wrong,—satisfied that the misery she was suffering was the penalty or the consequence of somebody else's misconduct, she began to cast about for a theory that should serve as a scapegoat. She "thought long, and deeply, and bitterly on marriage." She asked the question again and again, "What constitutes true marriage?" and a conviction gradually grew up within her that 'marriage without love was adultery.' She fell sick,—became very despairing, threatened to commit suicide,—recovered, lectured on Physiology for a livelihood,—came to the conclusion that she could not live with her husband any longer, and finally left him,—going home to her father, where she believed she could have rest from the incessant torture of a mean-spirited, jealous, unfeeling husband. She now entered a kind of Lyceum, where she taught and lectured and met all sorts of philosophers—socialists, communists and transcendentalists—taking part in their discussions, discoursing herself publicly on various topics, "speaking especially of marriage as annihilation of woman,—as often the grave of her heart and the destruction of her health and usefulness." Presently she fell in love with one of these traveling transcendentalists, an Englishman named Lynde, whose notions of love and marriage agreed charmingly with her own, and to whom she surrendered herself, because "a soul surging with passion must beat away barriers,—a love burning with the white heat of intense flame must melt all bars." The religious faith of those among whom she lived is thus set forth:

"They (the disciples of Mr. Lynde) had rejected a God whom they had been taught had made a hell to torment nearly his own dear children, and had slain his only son to save a few of them from the hell he had made. They found themselves loving a benificent Father, and never more to be the orphaned victims of an "Almighty Fiend." They had rejected the Sabbath as an imposed day of rest and religious worship, and had brought at tender and driven teams for a testimony, like the ancient Quakers. They found themselves accepting the rest of one day in seven as a wise necessity. They had rejected the Bible and all priestly ascendency; because, when thoughtful and kind-hearted people accept a book made to pacify all crimes on the earth, and the crowning crime in God, of having made the man guilty of all sin and sorrow here, and an eternity of hell torments, for the very sins he had himself ordained! The smallest amount of wisdom and goodness needed to deny such representation had both into the minds and hearts of special pleaders (Protestants, and to whom Mr. Lynde was a deputed minister."

But Mr. Lynde, [illegible] there was an end of that "pretty, pretty romance," and his special minister. Mrs. Hervey he was twitted by some of his [illegible] out of a considerable sum of money, which was appropriated to the organization of a Fourierite establishment. Then, Mary, either that,—then her husband stole away her child, and it was only after a long struggle with the law that she regained possession of her. She again returns to teaching, writes for several papers in this City,—publishes a book or two; goes through a great variety of adventures, discourses, conversations, &c.; continues to lecture on Physiology and Hygiene; practises hydropathy;—devotes herself to Fine Art; and finally falls in with a Mr. Vincent, Editor of a paper for which she had been writing, with whom she falls passionately in love, and resolves to live with him as his wife, "without the legal sanction,"—when a divorce, apparently procured by her husband, permitted her to go through a form of marriage. This she did,—declaring to him at the same time:

"In a marriage with you, I resign no right of my soul. I enter into no compact to be faithful to you. I only promise to be faithful to the deepest love of my heart. If that love is power, it will bear fruit for you and enrich your life—our life. If my love leads me from you—I must go."

And with this understanding they were married. "When," exclaims the author, "will woman cease to be an appendage, a parasite of man. Ah, when will woman stand before the universe an individual being, faithful to her own life-law, fully sensible of her God-given dower of love, and her right to bestow it according to the divine law of her attraction?"

From this outline of Mary Lyndon's autobiography, it is easy to see for what special purpose the book was written. A desire of parading her private griefs before the public, undoubtedly had a good deal to do with it. This appetite for public pity,—this hankering after the sympathy of a gaping crowd with private sufferings, is alarmingly prevalent. It is responsible for the numerous displays of physical deformity which disgust us daily in the public streets. A man with a fever sore, or distorted by epilepsy, considers himself entitled to public compassion, and feels comforted by the long faces and dolorous sighs which the public exposure of his afflictions excites. The same longing prompts many of the public exposures of domestic unhappiness with which the literature of the day abounds, and of which Mary Lyndon is among the most obtrusive and the most disgusting. For she delights not only in the display of her grief, but of her soiled morality. She delineates with equal zest, her sufferings from the uncongenial temper of her husband, and her resort to the illicit pleasures of adultery. Not content with sympathy for her griefs, she claims admiration for the heroism of her brazen defiance of social morals. And through all her fine phrases and blasphemous appeals to "divine law" and the right of love,—and all her affectation of argument in defence of infidelity and adultery, the fact is perfectly apparent, that pure sensualism is at the bottom of her opinions and her conduct. She is thoroughly and completely a sensual woman,—the slave of the coarsest lust;—and all her attempts to dignify this by giving it fine names, and claiming for it the sanctions of nature and of religion, though they may impose upon others as coarse, as sensual and as unprincipled as herself, cannot conceal her real character, nor disguise or excuse the infamous immorality of her conduct and her creed.

But there is more than a morbid desire for personal display in the publication of this book. While no one but a coarse, sensual and shamelessly immoral person could ever have consented to write it, no one but a zealous propagandist of vice and immorality would ever have sent it out to influence society. It is one of a class of books which have been recently spawned upon the public in great profusion, and which are designed to push the doctrines of a school of Reformers, whose creed consists chiefly in hatred to Christianity, and whose leading aim is the destruction of all the social forms, usages and laws to which Christian principle has given rise. Its fundamental idea is the [illegible] of Passional Attraction—[illegible] that the passions are the law-[illegible] kind—that the instincts of nature, the impulses and cravings of appetite, should be indulged and obeyed as the highest revelations of divinity—as the true voice of God in the human heart. Reason and conscience, in this scheme of moral philosophy, are ignored or divested of all meaning, and made secondary and subservient to mere animal passion, which is regarded and treated as the highest law of human nature—the only guide and governor of human conduct. Society, in the view of these Reformers, needs a reconstruction; and that upon their principles—upon the basis of passion instead of reason—of animal impulse and instinct, instead of the law of morals, as set forth in the Christian creed. It was fashionable a few years ago to urge this scheme of social reorganization upon public favor by argument—by considerations of economy, and by a metaphysical analysis of human nature and society. The Frenchman, FOURIER, was the great expounder of this new faith; and BRISBANE, whom Mary Lyndon styles "one of the most remarkable men of our age or of any age," was his great apostle in America. But now the fashion has changed. Argument proved a failure, and the same end is now sought by means of novels—of moving tales illustrating the horrors of social life as it now exists, and insinuating, rather than urging, the characteristics of the "good time coming." Mary Lyndon is written in the interest of this sensual school of social philosophy. And its leading object, to which all others are incidental, is to instill into the public mind the notion that the legal institution of Marriage, with its restraints and its duties, is at war with personal enjoyment,—meaning thereby the indulgence of personal passions and appetites,—and ought to be destroyed, and superseded by the free intercourse of the sexes, without any other restraint than that of personal inclination.

This is the specific lesson which this book was designed to teach. And its first and main appeal on behalf of this doctrine, is to those married women throughout the country who are situated as Mary Lyndon represents herself to have been;—who are married to men with whom they have no immediate sympathy,—who do not treat them kindly,—whom they do not love, and from whom they would gladly separate. Mary Lyndon exhorts all such women to follow her example. By presenting, in strong and passionate language, her sufferings and her mode of escaping from them,—and by holding up her conduct as sanctioned by nature, by humanity and by religious principle, the authoress of this book intends and seeks to have that example made the basis and the model for a new order of society. She tries to persuade all women to do as she has done. She married a man whom she never loved. She cherished for him an intense hatred; she taught his child to hate him;—she lied to him,—stole money from him, deceived him in every way her ingenuity could devise,—ran away from him, stole his child from him, reviled him in every circle where she moved—loved another man, and then still another, with whom she resolved to live as a mistress, and when she married him gave him distinctly to understand, that whenever she should meet another man whose companionship and intercourse she preferred, she should seek them and leave him. In all this she outraged the law of the land, the direct institutions of Christianity and the moral sentiments of society; and she exhorts all women similarly situated to imitate her example.

It is not at all unlikely that her book may induce a good many women to do as she did. For there are very many who are quite as unhappy in their conjugal relations as she was. Thousands of women are married every year to men whom they do not love—tens of thousands, both men and women, lead unhappy lives because they are uncongenially or unhappily married. Many of them, it is very probable, are weak-minded, or reckless, or despairing enough to surrender their judgments to Mary Lyndon's passionate and seductive appeals, and to make their own passions or their own wishes the sole law of their future conduct. It is upon such persons that the book is very likely to exert a decided and disastrous influence. Their position, their unhappiness, their inclinations, all predispose them to listen approvingly to its inculcations, and to regard the picture which the authoress gives of her present life as attractive and enviable. And it would not be at all strange if they should succeed in making themselves believe that her theory may be correct,—that what passes in the world for principle may be only prejudice,—that every one has a right to consult his own happiness in preference to the convenience or the opinions of anybody else,—that the impulses of nature are after all a truer and a better guide to conduct than any code of laws, and that this may so far become the general belief as to avert from their heads the reproaches of society, and perhaps the still sharper reproaches of conscience, for a defiance of the sanctions and duties under which they now live. Instances are becoming very common in society of the desertion of husbands by their wives, and of wives by their husbands;—and the tendency and object of such books as this, are to make them, not only common, but universal.

Now we are far from saying that the existing laws of this country, or of any other, in regard to divorce, are what they should be:—or that cases may not arise, and do not exist, in which wives are perfectly justified in refusing longer to live with their husbands, and husbands with their wives, although the law will give them no release. We believe that there are such cases,—cases in which we have no word of censure for the abandonment of conjugal duty. Mary Lyndon's may possibly have been such a case,—though as we have only her own statement of it, colored by her own feelings and distorted by her malignant passions, we can form no opinion of its merits. But, conceding it to have been just as she represents it, she might have been justified, perhaps, in leaving her husband and in returning to her father's home, or undertaking her own support. But not upon the grounds on which she attempts a justification:—not upon the ground that marriage is a vicious and tyrannical institution,—the "annihilation of woman," and the "death of love;"—nor upon the ground that concubinage,—intercourse ad libitum,—is the law by which it should be superseded. Mary Lyndon asserts her right to live with whomsoever she happens to love. The adoption of her creed, or the imitation of her conduct, would degrade social life to a level with the life of the brutes.

The writer of Mary Lyndon does not seem insensible to the inconveniences of her creed,—nor does she attempt any reply to arguments against it based upon them, except the reply that her own happiness was to be her own law. This is one of the conversations she records with a Mr. Milton:

"But if your doctrine is true, my dear Madam, you break up half our marriages. Our children will go about fatherless, and men will plunge into all evil."

"It is not my fault, Mr. Milton, that the world is not prepared for purity in its marriages. I can only say, I am prepared, at whatever cost, to break an unholy relation. I have no advice to offer to others excepting this, 'Do the greatest good in your power. If a connection produces more good than evil, remain in it. If the contrary, escape from it. Let justice be done though the heavens fall.'

* * * * * * *

"You are an enthusiast, my dear Madam. I cannot receive your opinions. They are dangerous. They may do for you, but weaker women need protection. I am a radical, but I think people who interfere with marriage go too far. If I believed as you do I should have no wife. Am I to cast off a poor, weak woman, who has lost her beauty and her health, her only inheritance, in bearing my children, because I might love almost any good-natured healthy woman better? Your doctrines are very cruel, Mrs. Hervey."

"I have counseled no cruelty, Mr. Milton. I see no necessity why children should be fatherless because a false marriage is dissolved. The number of real orphans seems to me to be increased by the continuance of unloving marriages. Children are sent to school and placed under the care of nurses and others where parents live in love. If people have common sense and common humanity, they can take care of their children after the dissolution of a home that but educates their offspring in discord. If they lack these humane attributes, the continuance of their marriage is not any more desirable. I have said that I would live in any connection that was productive of more good than evil. But can it be your duty to bring such children as your poor Bessie and Alfred into this hard world? Bessie can never walk a step with her terrible hip disease,—and Alfred—" I paused; I could not speak another word on that horrible subject—the boy was an idiot. The mother was a walking cadaver.

"Mr. Milton, you can sustain and cherish the poor lady who bears your name by law, and every consideration of kindness and justice demands it; but you need not lie to yourself or to God by calling her your wife, if you are conscious that she is not."

But in these inculcations of charity and kindness, by which she attempts to evade the inevitable result of her creed concerning Marriage, Mary loses sight entirely of a leading doctrine of that creed, and a leading fact in her practice. When you cease to love one, she holds, you may love another;—and then what becomes of this fine talk about cherishing and sustaining wives who have been abandoned because they are not loved? If by dissolving the marriage tie she meant simply—as she would seem to imply in this conversation—ceasing to live together as man and wife, while all the duties of the marriage relation,—kind treatment, pecuniary support, personal attention and cherishing care,—are still faithfully and conscientiously performed, her creed would be well enough,—for it would involve nothing worse than a very proper and laudable self-denial. But this is not what she means by it. It is exactly the opposite of her meaning. Self-denial forms no part of her creed upon this subject. On the contrary, self-indulgence,—the gratification of the animal passion which shestyles love,—its gratification in accordance with her own likings and attractions, is the pivot of her whole system,—the fundamental principle upon which her whole creed and all her conduct turn. She deserted her husband because she did not love him;—and she did not love him because he was not "congenial." She might upon her own principles just as well have deserted him because he was insane, or sick, or a cripple, or for any other reason. And in that case, as well as in her own, she could have loved and lived with somebody else. And if this is a good rule for her, it would have been equally good [illegible]—and every [illegible] could desert his wife for any reason he might see fit to plead.

Nor is it easy to see why this creed should be limited, in its application, to the marriage relation. If a wife or a husband may be abandoned at the convenience of either, why not a child or a parent, or a friend? Why should any obligation continue binding, after it becomes irksome? Why should the sexual passions enjoy an immunity from restraints of law, and not the passions of revenge, of avarice and of ambition, as well? Are they not all equally inherent in human nature,—equally the promptings of natural character? There is no argument that will release the one, without releasing the other also,—none that can prove one to be the true guide and law of life, and shut out the others from the same supremacy.

The sacredness of the marriage relation can never be discarded until Christianity is repudiated. This no one sees better than the Socialists and Passionists, who naturally hate both alike, and aim no blow at one that is not meant to reach the other also. That the relation, as it exists in society, is perfect—free from defect—involving no evils and needing never any modification to adapt it to social exigencies, or to individual cases of hardship,—no one contends. It must partake of the imperfections of everything human; and it is the duty of wise men, charged with the supervision of social laws, to watch its workings, to relieve so far as possible its inconveniences and its exceptional wrongs, to adapt its forms and obligations to the social necessities of the day, and to provide, so far as it can be done with safety to the general good, for the relief of those upon whom it inflicts unendurable and unmerited wrong. But it must be borne in mind, that it is a voluntary relation,—one assumed by the full and free consent of the parties to it,—one which no compulsion or constraint can ever force upon them, if they see fit to resist. Whatever of misfortune or of disappointment, therefore, it may involve, is traceable to some fault or neglect of duty on their part:—and they must bear it,—just as they must bear the consequences of their own mistakes in the other relations of life. It may be hard to do it;—but so it is hard to bear any misfortune. An unhappy marriage is a constant source of misery;—but so is any uncongenial relation,—so is sickness, deception or disappointment of any kind. All misfortunes may be relieved, where they cannot be avoided. Half the uncongeniality in married life so loudly complained of, is artificial, and would disappear before a sincere, conscientious and judicious attempt on either side to overcome it. A tenth part of the labor which was expended by Mary Lyndon in hating, and maligning and deceiving her husband, if devoted to mollifying and softening his character, would have made a different being of him in her sight. But she holds to no such creed of duty as this. She believes in no love but that of spontaneous passion. Her creed is as sensual as her nature. And the whole aim of her book is to substitute sensuality for duty, and make society a vast sty for the full and free indulgence of animal appetite,—unchecked by civil or by moral law,—and regulated only by the instincts and impulses of personal lust.

Such is our opinion of the character and tendency of Mary Lyndon. There have been a good many bad books published, in which the vilest morals have been insinuated into the minds of unsuspecting readers by the means of an adroit narration of fictitious adventures; but in this work we have the first example of a deliberate attempt to teach the art of adultery, and to justify that crime as the realization of a "true life." We hear almost daily of domestic disruptions, and of whole families being plunged into affliction and disgrace by the conduct of women, of wives and mothers, who desert their families, abandon their husbands, and not unfrequently their children, in obedience to some fantastical whim, or some fancied lack of appreciation on the part of those whom they had solemnly vowed to honor and obey; and, if such books as Mary Lyndon are permitted to be circulated all over the country, tainting the atmosphere of the houses into which they are dropped, and sowing the seeds of infidelity in the minds of innocent readers, such instances of domestic wretchedness will become still more frequent.

If the authoress of Mary Lyndon felt herself impelled to make the public her confidant, she should have imitated the example of Mrs. MOWATT, and published her autobiography under her proper name. As the history of an individual whose position, career and character are well known to the public, it would have done no harm; but, as the romantic autobiography of Mary Lyndon, though it has not sufficient literary merit to entitle it to a place by the side of the sensuous romances of GEORGE SAND, yet we fear it has sufficient ability to work much greater harm than any of the works of that eloquent author. If we did not believe it to be a book of very bad tendencies, we should not pay it the compliment of giving it this prominent and unusual notice.

THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.

The "Daniel Webster"—Gorham—The White Mountains—Drive to the Glen House—Summit of Mount Washington—Sunrise—Storm.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ON BOARD QUEBEC STEAMER MONTREAL, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, Saturday, July 28, 1855.

The steamer Daniel Webster touches at Rockland, on the trips between Bangor and Portland—which are made three times a week—and, passing between shore and islands, arrived at Portland, with our small party, at 4 P. M. There was time for a drive around the city, and we were rushing northward the following morning. The Portland folks pride themselves not a little on this railroad, which they fancy emancipates them from their former dependence on Boston, and is to rival the usual route to Montreal by Lake Champlain and the Vermont Central Railroad, which passes on the westside of the White Mountains. But the latter routes present the greater variety of scenery, and are more direct from New-York; besides this, the rates of charge on the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad are higher than on any road I know. One admirable regulation, however, gives it undoubted precedence—the men are forbidden to spit in the cars, and the conductors are required to enforce this rule.

Approaching the White Mountains, the scenery becomes romantic and beautiful. We had been informed at Portland that by stopping twenty-four hours at Gorham we could ascend to the top of Mount Washington; but the traveler who lays that flattering unction to his soul will be disappointed. We could obtain no facilities at the Alpine House, and at the Glen House were told that horses and a guide could only be furnished early in the morning. A lumbering, leathery horror of a stage-coach, already filled uncomfortably, received and conveyed us for a dollar each seven or eight miles to the Glen House, picturesquely situated in the heart of the mountains, and at the base of the [illegible] in the range. The drive with [illegible] unaccompanied with the annoyance of clattering purpose, would have been a superb one. Shadowy groves, filled with the roar of mountain streams, and dark with primeval woods, were on every side, and at every turn, were disclosed abysmal gorges and hollows, cavernous clefts and ragged crags, gray boulders and gnarled forest trees overhanging yawning chasms; while streams were dashing wildly along rocky gullies—materials for many delicious days' rambles and luxuriant descriptions. The summits of the highest mountains were buried in clouds that trailed sometimes to the belt of forest encircling their bases. A small stream they call Peabody River, escaping through a rent in the bluff, is followed by the road nearly all the way.

It was but 1 o'clock when we reached the Glen House, and though the trip to the summit of Mount Washington occupies but three hours, we could not be supplied with horses. However, there is no interdict to the use of feet, and as we heard of several accidents to the daring equestrians, the five miles of ascent seemed a trifle, especially as there is accommodation for the night at "the Tip-top House," and those who remain may have a view of sunrise. A carriage road to the summit will be completed this Fall. We were shown a pretty model of the carriage, invented by D. O. MACKENZIE, the President of the Company, which will be as safe and comfortable as the most timid and luxurious could desire. The bridle-path, turning from this unfinished road, is circuitous, and gives a fine view before entering the forest, of the beautiful valley, the gulf of forest tops just below, and the mountains on every side wooded to the sky, or severing it with their sharp peaks—the higher summits lost in masses of heavy mist, ever shifting and rolling from one side to another. Entering the woods the path mounts from one steep ridge to another, filing around frowning precipices and crossing ravines where the sunlight has never penetrated, and streams hastening to pour their crystal treasures into the rivers below. Halfway up is a massive spur of rock, stark and storm-bleached, on which you may pause to gaze on the glorious scene below—the billowy sweep of mountains—the speckllike valleys—the gloomy depths of forest at your feet. Scrambling up the rude acclivities by aid of torn and shattered rocks, the reward of perseverance is at length obtained, and you stand on the topmost peak, 6,300 feet above the ocean level—far beyond the clouds and rolling thunder—commanding a view of 250 miles of mountains like ocean billows frozen into stillness, plains, valleys, forest and distant sea, all a misty, sombre and motionless waste—for the light that fleets with shadow over its surface is softened into a twilight gloom, and an awful silence reigns around you.

Far to the North is Moosehead Lake, showing a strip of white in the dark mass, with a faint outline of blue summits beyond it; and on the west the Green Mountains of Vermont bound the horizon; lakes here and there gleaming in the dusky waste, and rivers like threads of silver, while southward ocean borders the picture. If the day is cloudy, a driving gulf of vapor lies below, through which jagged rocks loom dimly, or the lightning rends it with fiery streaks. No description could do justice to the scene, but you have gained a mine of thought and feeling on this wondrous height.

Matchless in grandeur and glory is sunrise seen from hence! As you watch the stars shining brightly in the strange solitude, there is a flush on the Eastern horizon, and presently the nearer crags become discernible with their belting forests; and the scarce defined peaks at greater distance. Other ridges in the boundless prospect appear in the spectral light, till the great sun lifts himself from his bed of golden fire, and the Eastern and Western summits are one by one illuminated to greet his approach, and he sends beams of light like rejoicing messengers far down into the fathomless valleys.

Desirous of seeing the picturesque effect of a gathering storm, we ascended the height in the rear of the Glen House, opposite the M[illegible], whose regal brow was veiled with impenetrable clouds. The view richly rewarded exposure to the rain, and the impertinent wonder of the fashionable crowd, who consider it "peculiar" to be willing to encounter inconvenience for the sake of a new prospect. Heavy volumes of vapor were swept in every direction, now lifted above the hill-ranges, now rolling down rapidly like a thick curtain shrouding a picture. A struggle seemed to be going on between the invisible spirits of mountain and cloud realms, and the spectacle of their stupendous combat rivaled any in this Helvetian region. Now the vapor king seemed to have the victory; his robe of mist was wrapped closely round Mount Washington, to its very base; but, at the same instant, the clouds above were swept apart and the glorious summit peered o'er them, far, far up—as it were in mid-heaven—a lighting-place for the herald Mercury or a descending seraph, rather than a spot approachable by the dwellers on earth.

The Bakers' Loaf.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Your correspondent, "Fair Play," appears somewhat sensitive on the subject of the "Small Loaf System." He has not denied my statement, "that bakers' loaves have not increased in proportion to the decline in the price of flour."

"Fair Play" has not discovered any reduction in the price of flour, only in common brands, such as are not used in his neighborhood. If he will consult your paper of the 23d May, 1855, he will there find "Fancy Genesee" quoted at $10 37½@$11 62½! In to-day's TIMES, the same brand is quoted at $8 62½@$8 87½! Is there no difference in these quotations? "Fair Play" does not tell us the kind of flour used "in his neighborhood." We suppose, however, it must be some particular "brand," put up expressly for himself and friends, and not known in the "Corn Market." Fancy Genesee is good enough for our use, to make our bread, and we advise him to purchase it to make bread for his customers, and we will guarantee that no fault will be found with the quality of his bread, provided he gives them what is justly their right, an increase in the size of the loaves at least one-fifth!

It is not my purpose to elicit any newspaper controversy on this subject, but merely wish to direct public attention to the importance of all uniting in the laudable undertaking of crushing all monopolies, which tend to distress the poor. One of the greatest of them is the flour and bread; the poor can, when pressed to necessity, dispense with meats, but to be deprived of bread, is almost like taking life itself. The last year the poor have suffered almost beyond endurance, and is believes all (especially the rich) to unite their efforts to prevent, if possible, a recurrence of last Winter's misery.

Let us slaim our rights from the bakers. We ask them to cheapen their bread, just in proportion to the decline in flour. It is a just demand; if they refuse it, we have only to dispense with their services, and make bread for ourselves.

A POOR MAN.

The steamer Ben West, bound for Weston, struck a snag and sunk in the Missouri River, near Washington, last Friday evening. She lies in about ten feet water, and, being an old boat, will be a total loss. She was loaded principally with lumber. When the F. X. Aubry passed her, there were two barges alongside, taking out the cargo. The Ben West was probably worth $5,000, and was owned by Mr. HAGERMEROSE. There was no insurance on the boat.

We learn by a letter from the Alleghany Springs that there are no less than four Virginia editors at present sojourning there, viz: RINGWALT of the Whig, MCDONALD of the Lynchburg Virginian, SYME of the Petersburg Intelligencer, and BAKER of the Southside Democrat.

Interesting from Kansas.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Republican, writing under date of August 9, gives some interesting news. He says:

"The Legislature has been occupied lately this week with the bill fixing County Courts. It has not yet passed, but will be disposed of in a day or two. To-day, the opinion of the Supreme Court was received. It is against Shannon, in favor of the Legislature, fully sustaining the acts of the latter. You will receive the document through the same medium by which you get this, and I need not comment upon it. The Court is composed, as you know, of three Judges. This opinion emanates from Judges ELMORE and LECOMPTE. It was written by LECOMPTE. Judge Johnson shirked it, by claiming to the propriety of the Court's giving an opinion. He is the Free-Soil Judge from Ohio, and is a strong friend of REEDER, being about the only open friend he has hereabouts.

At 11 o'clock to-day, the Council and House went into joint session to locate a permanent seat of Government. On motion of Dr. STRINGFELLOW, it was

Resolved, That the joint session find themselves so made, by an act of their superior better, that joint the seat of government, which might be decided upon at that time. It was also moved, and the motion was carried, that the vote be taken viva voce, and that the place getting a majority of all the votes cast should be the permanent seat of government.

The whole number of votes cast was 38; necessary to a choice, 20. On the third ballot LECOMPTON was declared to be the choice of the joint session for the capital of Kansas.

LECOMPTON is named for Judge LECOMPTE, of the Supreme Court of Kansas. It is situated on Kansas River, near the geographical centre of the Territory, and is about sixty miles from this place. Convenient as it is to all portions of the Territory, the location will doubtless give general satisfaction. The town site is beautiful. Timber abunds. Water is plenty. Both timber and water are of the most excellent quality. Yesterday, shares in the Lecompton Town Company could have been bought for one hundred dollars; to day they cannot be bought for less than one thousand, except when a panic is compelled to sell by a money pressure. This evening men are considered worth $10,000, who, last evening, were considered worth nothing. To-day men are regarded as good for fifty thousand dollars, who, yesterday, were regarded as good for several hundred less than nothing. What is it that fickle fortune will not do for lucky people? This result adds much excitement and a great deal of log-rolling, and splashes with cold water many high hopes of fortune. Some are elated—more are depressed.

Last evening, President SHANNON delivered an address on Slavery to a large assemblage, in front of the Morris House. The speech was read from manuscript, but was a masterly production. The address was frequently interrupted by applause. General ATCHISON, who left here this morning, was called out, but declined speaking on account of the late hour.

President SHANNON spoke two hours and a half, and had the close attention of his auditory throughout.

From the Kansas correspondence of the Missouri Democrat, Aug. 6, we make the following further extracts:

LEGISLATIVE STATISTICS.

I enclose an extended catalogue of the members and officers of both Houses of the first Legislative Assembly of Kansas Territory. It will afford some interesting statistics for future reference.

The youngest member of the Council is 24 years of age; the oldest 52. The youngest member of the House is 22 years old; the oldest 70.

There are three farmers in the Council, fifteen in the House; five lawyers in the Council, one in the House; in the House four physicians, in the Council one; in the House four merchants, in the Council two; in the Council there is one civil engineer and a printer, and in the House a machinist.

Virginia gave to the Council three members, and to the House five; Ohio, to the Council one, House seven; Kentucky, to the Council seven, House seven; Louisiana, to the Council one; Iowa, to the Council one; Missouri, to the House four; Pennsylvania, to the House two, and Tennessee two members; Maryland, to the House one, while of native birth there is only one member, Mr. JOHNSON, the President's son. I speak now of the nativity, not last residence of members.

The catalogue shows that of the nineteen members of the Council nine came from Missouri, while of the twenty-six who comprise the House twenty-one came from our own State; also, nine of the Council and twenty Representatives are married; the others are doubtless going to be as soon as possible.

NOTICES OF THE MEMBERS.

[illegible] of the members, the most prominent, upon [illegible] has been introduced pro-slavery in Kansas since. It is the adoption of armorial bearings and mottoes by each of the Solons, which, it may be presumed, are intended to indicate each one's "strong point." I enclose you the exhibit, from which you can make such extracts as are proper.

We omit the ages, residences and politics of the members, as they have already been given by us, but here are the mottoes of the newly installed Sirons of Kansas:

THE TERRITORY—EXCELSIOR.

COUNCIL.

T. Johnson, President, "Justice to all."

R. R. Rowe, President pro. tem., "Just laws and rigid execution."

John W. Forman, "The Organic Act—our Charter of Liberty."

Jas. Whitlock, "My country's flag."

Samuel A. Williams, "Kansas and the Union."

H. W. Younger, "Order and liberty."

J. H. Stringfellow, Speaker, "Sovereign rights."

J. C. Anderson, Speaker pro. tem., "Vox populi, vox Dei."

J. M. Ayle, Chief Clerk, "Civil and religious liberty."

John Martin, Assistant Clerk, "Strict construction of the Constitution."

J. O. Thomson, Engrossing Clerk, "To the victors belong the spoils."

B. F. Stanton, Enrolling Clerk, "Union only when it protects our interests."

STRINGFELLOW AND PRESIDENT SHANNON.

General STRINGFELLOW visited the Legislature to-day. He is a slight made little man, with blue eyes, and hair plentifully sprinkled with gray; was in not so good looking as his brother. The Speaker looks like a young man; the General like an old one.

President SHANNON has received a vote from this section, that in the opinion of Democratic members, stumping for Atchison and Henderson over the horrors of free society, is not exactly the mission of a Christian Professor. He sent word by an intimate friend to a prominent member of the House, that if it was convenient to the Legislature, he would address them here on Tuesday, August 7,—to-morrow. The thing was spoken about, but members concluded that "it would not do to invite such a man to their official assembly." So SHANNON has had his offer coolly declined.

On Monday, on the Worcester Railroad, a man named CASEY, living in Worcester, jumped from a train while it was entering the depot in that city, and before the engine and cars had fairly stopped, foremost upon the platform, and pitched down on his hair caught in the wheels of the cars. He was promptly drawn from his perilous position, [illegible] severe wounds in his head were dressed [illegible] to, and he was sent to his home. [illegible] withdrawal of his head from proximity to the wheel which held his hair, was almost equal, he says, to the scalping process.

SCIENCE.

American Association for the Advancement of Science.

BROWN UNIVERSITY, PROVIDENCE, Tuesday, Aug. 14, 1855.

Gentlemen who make a business of scientific lectures, have not discovered the secret of Nature, but are discoverers of the secrets of human nature. Gentlemen who, year on the years, and day after day, have stood before crowds of fellow-creatures, and have seen them gradually, but surely, yielding to the influence of the peculiarly noisy, the monotonous, the gentlemanly, the gentle, the pathetic, the sarcastic, the witty, and the humorous tones of voice and that transcendent tone of the university of the Mississippi—gentlemen who are known together by their tones more as public speakers than by their fame as Science, are learning gradually, by the force of Science, which the chairman of the gold mills of Brown.

If the streets of Providence seem a little less crowded and if the College Hill cows not quite so many to the labor of getting to and from the lecture, the place of brown but white would not be unknown. If the cut-throat instruments of the operators of the cows, that screamed about the cities last, it is almost indescribable to hire a guide for you can by no means be a guide unless yourself save by dint of asking at every other corner; and that is not a pleasant operation, particularly where the conversation keeps once and before that you buy a conversation by way of pay. However, the University, the hill once fairly attacked, is noisy and deserted. Applicants for literary honors, who have literally climbed the hill of Fame, are deserted, while the places that knew them once shall know them no more until September's golden sunshine gives tokens that Summer's gone, and Autumn comes to tell its tale—even as I leave hills and sunbeams and proceed to tell my story of the meeting here.

The number in attendance this morning will be large. They are heard of as coming from South and East and North. The West is slightly represented generally. On the Hotel books to-night, are the names of Professor DANA, the President of last year, Professors LOOMIS and GIBBS, of New-York; DUNGLISON, of Philadelphia; SILLIMAN, WM. MITCHELL, MAHAN and LOVERING. The Freshmen been at night, no doubt, fringe showing through the flannel a fair representation from the South. We have as yet the pleasant face and jovial person of Professor HENRY, the doubled voice Captain WILKES, the persuasive accents of Professor BACHE, the poetical salt-water embodied in MAURY, and the general good fellowship which the old owners of this body receive as being with them, safely stowed away in head and heart. Assurance gives yearly tickets in consequence of the tributal deposits from the rills of individual contribution, as the gray essays in among the black [illegible] the old time are strengthened and the Association is strong and honored and touch.

The report of the Government Coast Survey, for the year just ending, promises to be valuable. Prof. AGASSIZ has been diligently engaged in investigations of the Corals, in connection with the Survey. Prof. BACHE has taken soundings and established base lines. Prof. LOOMIS and others have observed the sun's eclipse of May. WM. BLAKE's Pacific Railroad Expedition has returned rich in results of explorations in California, a volume of the record of which is to be published the coming Fall; results to be expounded here, in part, by Mr. BLAKE. Ex-President DANA will deliver his address on Thursday evening.

Prof. AGASSIZ has issued a modest prospectus for his forthcoming quarto contribution to American Science. The history of the origin of this work has been widely public. "It is," says the Professor, "a voluntary contribution to the progress of science among us;" requiring ten years' more labor. It is understood that the first volume, which will soon be issued by a Boston house, is to treat of the Embryology of the Turtles of the United States. The learned Professor has been "after" the genus Testudo, with a bright touch and a very sharp stick; and has probably succeeded in discovering more of their habits and social customs than we have heretofore been possessed of.

The report that Dr. WAYLAND has resigned the Presidency of Brown University stands uncontradicted. A second rumor is current that BARNAS SEARS will succeed him.

Why won't the Association agree to meet in New-York late next Winter? Your City is comfortable when the frost is in the ground, and neither empty houses nor epidemics need then scare the Church. The Colleges usually give a vacation in the holidays. Why not make New-York to relation? M.

Meeting at Brown University.

FIRST DAY.

BROWN UNIVERSITY, PROVIDENCE, Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1855.

The Association commenced its ninth meeting this morning. The preliminary general session was held at 10 o'clock in the Chapel of Manning Hall. The different branches of Science are ably represented. The number of gentlemen exceeds four hundred in opposite of a hundred. The boats of last night, and the trains of this morning, have brought large accessions. Professors AGASSIZ, PEIRCE, BACHE, come from the East. Professor BACHE has been busy with the United States Coast Survey in Maine. New-York is still further represented, by Professors JAMES HALL, of Albany, and Dr. JOHN TORREY, of New-York. The latter gentleman is President of the Association for this year. Professors ROGERS, HENRY and others are also here. Undoubtedly gentlemen come primed with Science, and prepared to open batteries of heavy eloquence. We await them.

The session, it is thought upon dispassionate consideration after breakfast, will not be concluded by Saturday. It is likely to bite largely into next week. It may continue until Wednesday. Encouraging symptoms of an abundance of work are discovered upon the record book. Members enter titles of papers to an extent that now appears to be nearly inexhaustible. The customary division into Sections will take place; the Geologists going by themselves, the Chemists ditto, the Mathematicians in the same category.

The officers are:

President—Dr. JOHN TORREY, of New-York.

Permanent Secretary—Prof. JOSEPH LOVERING, of Cambridge.

Treasurer—Dr. A. L. ROGERS, of Philadelphia.

General Secretary—Dr. WOLCOTT GIBBS, of New-York.

The Local Committee (Prof. CASWELL, Chairman,) has attended to its duties, in a fashion that will cause its list of names to be forever green in the memory of newspaper men. There is a respectable assortment of all the essentials. Scientific men every where, do yes likewise! Be clever to the Press, for they have to work hard; and the big names do seem to crack their cheeks.

CLEVELAND PROCEEDINGS INTERESTING.

Members not in a pocket, touching the volume of Cleveland Proceedings. The printers, unacquainted to the high-sounding titles of the Brooklinite and the Tycoonbaptists, and utterly confounded by the Platonicians and the Dinotherium, have made sad blunders, so that the volume is nearly sent back. Even the faithful scribes of distinguished scientific men are confounded. In this condition of affairs, it becomes a question whether the volume shall go where with all its faults upon its head; or, whether it shall be organized; and if so, where is the money to come from? Pay the expenses of the meeting, because of the sudden quitting of non-paying members. The question

NEW-YORK CITY.

HIS HONOR THE MAYOR.

How Have the Mighty Fallen!

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Under the Temperance meeting to-night, mention is made of the Scientific Convention held in Providence, Rhode Island, and of a "brilliant party" in the members of the Scientific Convention held in Providence, Rhode Island, and of a "brilliant entertainment" given by President WAYLAND, of Brown University, in honor of their presence, and also by Millards. How the mind of old Brown will grieve for the degeneracy of today! What would Prof. Silliman, the father of "moral science" thinking of Brown's guests?

FACILIS DESCENSUS AVERNI.

If Mr. D'Avenel, Esq., will put on his spectacles and carefully read, which on sometimes his "brilliant" he will see just what the telegraph used to say. But our "Friend D'Avenel" should remember that the telegraph works by lightning and that it is unfair thing to make sport of lightning. By the way, our Scientific Reporter at Providence says that it was a very "brilliant party" that President WAYLAND gave the members of the Association.

Sinners, or Honest Thieves?

A Weehawken gentleman who sends us his name, is satisfied that the "English Gipsies" just now squatting near Hoboken, are nothing more nor less than a gang of horse thieves, and are in connection with other gangs stationed all the way from Hoboken to Canada. We hope our friend is mistaken. It is a great deal more amusing to let them pass as the old English gipsies. We don't love either of them better than off by them. Make hot weather for a school of day bugs, but clock them with your charity; and meanwhile, if you choose, keep your stables locked and your dogs in the vicinity.

Board of Supervisors.

This body met yesterday at 4 P. M., but his Honor the Mayor, and his Honor the Recorder were absent, consequently no business could be done. Supervisor WAKEMAN was in the Chair pro tem., and on motion of Supervisor HERRICK, the Board adjourned to meet again this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Aid to the Sufferers from Yellow Fever—Meeting of Merchants.

A meeting of merchants was held at the Corn Exchange, corner of Broad and South streets, yesterday afternoon, in behalf of the sufferers from yellow fever in Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport, Va. The attendance was very respectable, and there was a general sentiment of regret was expressed that there should be any necessity for such a meeting, a determination was manifested that the occasion should not be allowed to pass without the adoption of some measures likely to result in the benefit of the unfortunate portion of our people, for whose sake the meeting had been convened. WALTER S. GRIFFITH, Esq., presided; and ALFRED BARNETT, Esq., was chosen Secretary. Addresses were delivered by JAMES T. Soutter, Esq., and others, briefly but forcibly stating the object of the meeting, and the urgent need of immediate effort to ascertain the fact. A resolution was duly moved and adopted, to the following effect:

Resolved, That a Committee of fifteen be and is hereby appointed to receive and solicit subscriptions from the citizens of New-York and vicinity, in behalf of the sufferers by the recent yellow fever in Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport, Virginia, in that district country, the Yankees, now dwelling in those places, and that the funds so raised be distributed by a Committee to be appointed by this meeting.

To carry out the spirit of this resolution, the presiding officer of the meeting, in compliance with the unanimous desires thereof, appointed as the Committee of Action to receive and solicit subscriptions, the following gentlemen:

James T. Soutter, Treasurer; John L. Buckley, John Potts Brown, Robert Blow, Isaac T. Frost, Thomas C. Nash, William J. Schenck, Charles Sanford, Edward Ely, Alfred Barrett, John Hecker, W. C. Sturges, Theodore Ferry, Lewis Roberts, B. M. Fox.

The Committee to distribute whatever funds may be collected, was also appointed by the Chairman. It was composed of the following gentlemen: J. T. SOUTTER, N. H. WALKER and JOHN O. WILLIAMS.

Shortly afterwards the meeting adjourned.

The Capture of Mexico.

A meeting of the officers who served in Mexico, residing in this immediate vicinity, was held on Wednesday evening at Gen. WARD B. BURNETT's residence, when a Committee was appointed to make the necessary preparations to celebrate the anniversary of the entrance of the American army into Mexico—the 14th of September—by a dinner. The Committee was instructed to prepare by laws and do such other duties as may be necessary to form a permanent organization for the purpose.

New Granada Canal and Steam Navigation Company.

This Company, which has purchased from the Provincial Company of New Granada the franchise of the Canal, extending from Pasa Cabello to the Magdalena River, a distance of ninety-two miles, yesterday dispatched a pioneer steamer to enter upon the navigation of the Canal and the Magdalena River. The steamer is made of iron, is very substantially built, and bears the name of the President of the Company, Henry Wells, of WELLS & FARGO'S Express. A number of the Directors of the Company, and gentlemen interested in the existence and success of the enterprise, accompanied the steamer as far as the Company's Pier. Five steamers of similar construction and strength are shortly to follow. The capital of the Company is $3,000,000.

The Fire Department Committee.

The Committee on Fire Department of the Board of Aldermen met yesterday at 5 P. M., at the City Hall—present, Aldermen HOWARD (Chairman) and TOWNSEND.

The application of Messrs. TILLEY and BURKE from Engine Company No. 14, came appeal from the decision of the Fire Commissioners, was taken up and evidence resumed to show why the decision should be reversed. These parties are charged with having, on the 15th day of June last, while going to a fire in Elm-street, made an assault upon some of the members of Engine Company No. 4, as also running their engine into the engine of Company No. 2.

The evidence of the witnesses only corroborated the testimony adduced at previous examinations before the Committee, and published in the TIMES.

Messrs. TOWLINSON and BARWAS appeared on behalf of Engine Company No. 14, and E. F. MCGOWAN, Esq., for Engine Company No. 4.

The Tenement-Story Law.

ARREST.

The daily average of cases of intoxication was yesterday maintained, and examinations were held on to several old prisoners. The daily summary presents the following results:

Tombs, before Alderman Baird	9
Jefferson Market, before Justice Davidson	17
Essex Market, before Justice Bennett	18
Fourth District, before Justice Regan	2

Coroners' Investigations.

HELPLESS FROM EXPOSURE.

An inquest was yesterday held by Coroner WOLHELM upon the body of a female child found dead in the alley-way leading from No. 128 Fourth-street, in which place it had been left by some cruel unknown. The post-mortem examination showed that it had been but recently born, the navel string being yet united and the body uncovered. The doctor gave it as his opinion that the child was born alive and had died from exposure. Verdict accordingly.

RUN OVER ACCIDENT.

Coroner WILHELM also held an inquest on the body of a lad named PATRICK CONNAGHAN, aged 13 years, who died on Tuesday last, from injuries received by being run over by a horse and cart belonging to Mr. [illegible] of Ninth-street. The boy was playing in the street when the accident occurred, and the driver of the vehicle, and the jury returned a verdict of "accidental death." The second was a native of this City.

FATAL ACCIDENT IN A FOUNDRY.

Cornelius FRANKLIN, of Gen. Lewis's regiment, in Tyler's foundry, in Howard-street, was yesterday severely injured by a piece of cast iron which flew off from a machine lathe. Coroner GUNTHER held an inquest upon the body and a verdict of accidental death was returned. Deceased was 30 years of age, and a native of Ireland.

A meeting of the officers who served in Mexico, residing in this immediate vicinity, was held on Wednesday evening at Gen. WARD B. BURNETT's residence, when a Committee was appointed to make the necessary preparations to celebrate the anniversary of the entrance of the American army into Mexico—the 14th of September—by a dinner. The Committee was instructed to prepare by laws and do such other duties as may be necessary to form a permanent organization for the purpose.

New Granada Canal and Steam Navigation Company.

This Company, which has purchased from the Provincial Company of New Granada the franchise of the Canal, extending from Pasa Cabello to the Magdalena River, a distance of ninety-two miles, yesterday dispatched a pioneer steamer to enter upon the navigation of the Canal and the Magdalena River. The steamer is made of iron, is very substantially built, and bears the name of the President of the Company, Henry Wells, of WELLS & FARGO'S Express. A number of the Directors of the Company, and gentlemen interested in the existence and success of the enterprise, accompanied the steamer as far as the Company's Pier. Five steamers of similar construction and strength are shortly to follow. The capital of the Company is $3,000,000.

The Fire Department Committee.

The Committee on Fire Department of the Board of Aldermen met yesterday at 5 P. M., at the City Hall—present, Aldermen HOWARD (Chairman) and TOWNSEND.

The application of Messrs. TILLEY and BURKE from Engine Company No. 14, came appeal from the decision of the Fire Commissioners, was taken up and evidence resumed to show why the decision should be reversed. These parties are charged with having, on the 15th day of June last, while going to a fire in Elm-street, made an assault upon some of the members of Engine Company No. 4, as also running their engine into the engine of Company No. 2.

The evidence of the witnesses only corroborated the testimony adduced at previous examinations before the Committee, and published in the TIMES.

Messrs. TOWLINSON and BARWAS appeared on behalf of Engine Company No. 14, and E. F. MCGOWAN, Esq., for Engine Company No. 4.

The Tenement-Story Law.

ARREST.

The daily average of cases of intoxication was yesterday maintained, and examinations were held on to several old prisoners. The daily summary presents the following results:

Coroners' Investigations.

HELPLESS FROM EXPOSURE.

An inquest was yesterday held by Coroner WOLHELM upon the body of a female child found dead in the alley-way leading from No. 128 Fourth-street, in which place it had been left by some cruel unknown. The post-mortem examination showed that it had been but recently born, the navel string being yet united and the body uncovered. The doctor gave it as his opinion that the child was born alive and had died from exposure. Verdict accordingly.

RUN OVER ACCIDENT.

Coroner WILHELM also held an inquest on the body of a lad named PATRICK CONNAGHAN, aged 13 years, who died on Tuesday last, from injuries received by being run over by a horse and cart belonging to Mr. [illegible] of Ninth-street. The boy was playing in the street when the accident occurred, and the driver of the vehicle, and the jury returned a verdict of "accidental death." The second was a native of this City.

FATAL ACCIDENT IN A FOUNDRY.

Cornelius FRANKLIN, of Gen. Lewis's regiment, in Tyler's foundry, in Howard-street, was yesterday severely injured by a piece of cast iron which flew off from a machine lathe. Coroner GUNTHER held an inquest upon the body and a verdict of accidental death was returned. Deceased was 30 years of age, and a native of Ireland.

LONG ISLAND.

Republican Convention.

A meeting was held Wednesday afternoon according to previous announcement, at the Hall of the Sons of Temperance, corner of South First and Fourth streets, E. LIGHTS, Esq., in the Chair; Messrs. J. STEARNS and SAMUEL WELSH, Jr., Secretaries. The object before the meeting was the appointment of six delegates to the Republican State Convention, to be held at Syracuse on Sept. 26. Most of the citizens present were from the First Assembly District, and it was reported that arrangements for other meetings were progressing. In consideration of this it was decided to elect two delegates only and appoint a Committee of Conference.

E. JACOBS and E. D. CULVER, Esqs., were appointed delegates; Messrs. JOHN B. WELLS and JOHN FRIERS appointed A Committee of Conference was transacted. After adjournment, steps were taken to organize a Club for the Eastern District.

Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association.

This society is increasing rapidly in popular favor, if we may judge from the numerous additions upon the regular monthly meetings, which are being kept up during the Summer, and much interest is manifested. At the last meeting, "The Influence of Secret Societies" was discussed with much ability.

The society is making arrangements for one of the best courses of lectures ever delivered in this city, for the coming season. Among other distinguished lecturers engaged is Mr. THACKERAY.

The Brooklyn Ferry.

This Ferry is rapidly progressing towards completion, and will soon be in a running condition. The boats are to be [illegible] the fleet of South Ferry boats, and [illegible] to purchase of the owners, during business in the City. Two boats are now being finished at W.

NEW-JERSEY.

Wedding M. E. Church.

The new Society of Methodists, organized in Jersey City some months since, under the care of the Wedding M. E. Church, are erecting an edifice for worship in Montgomery-street, between Grove and Barnes streets. Yesterday afternoon the corner-stone of the new Church was laid in the presence of a large congregation. The exercises were opened at 5 o'clock by the reading of the 84th and 87th Psalms by Rev. Mr. BURLEMAN of Brooklyn; a hymn was given out by Rev. Mr. [illegible] of the Church, singing John Wesley, and prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. AYRES. Rev. Mr. VAN CLEEF, of the Reformed Dutch Church in Wayne-street, then gave out another hymn, after the singing of which an address was made by Rev. J. S. INGELS, who spoke of the progress of Methodism, not only in its extent, but in its influence. While it is increasing in numbers it is also rising in the estimation of education and of wealth of the people, particularly among the Churches.

Rev. Mr. WHITEHEAD, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church in York-street, then addressed the audience. He referred to the time when the Trinity congregation gave a lot for such as the First Ward. Twenty years ago, when he was stationed in the York-street Church, there was but one Church of each denomination—Methodist, Presbyterian, Dutch Reformed, Episcopal and Catholic. Now, there are three of the Dutch Reformed, three of the Episcopal, two of the Presbyterian denominations, and this is the result of the labors of Methodism in Jersey City. The speaker was followed by Rev. Mr. VAN CLEEF, who spoke of the Dutch Reformed, and then of the Episcopal, two of the Presbyterian denominations, and this is the result of the labors of Methodism in Jersey City. The speaker was followed by Rev. Mr. [illegible] who spoke of the Methodist Episcopal and Catholic. Now, there are three of the Dutch Reformed, three

SYDNEY SMITH'S LIFE AND LETTERS.
HARPER & BROTHERS,
Pearl-street, Franklin-square,
PUBLISH THIS MORNING.

I.

SYDNEY SMITH'S LIFE AND LETTERS.

A MEMOIR OF REV. SYDNEY SMITH. By his Daughter, LADY HOLLAND. With a Selection from his Letters, edited by Mrs. AUSTIN. 2 vols. 12mo., Muslin, $2; half-calf $5.

From the London Critic.

A more than commonly delightful and wholesome book.

From the Leader.

Lady Holland has now fulfilled her mother's wish, by writing such a memoir as will enable the world to understand her father's character more nearly in its full integrity. Mrs AUSTIN, at the same time, has arranged such of his letters as could honestly be published, and illustrated them with a delightful preface, full of tact and helpful comment.

From the London Spectator.

Lady HOLLAND has produced a vivid and interesting picture of the more private career and domestic life of her father. A charming picture of a remarkable man, as he appeared to his friends and family.

From the London Literary Gazette.

Next to a day with SYDNEY SMITH himself, there could scarcely be enjoyed a richer treat than the perusal of this book. It is a worthy memorial of one of the wisest and best, as well as the wittiest of men.

From the London Leader.

A more lovely picture has seldom been presented to the world than that of this brave and bright creature, so rich in wit, humor, kindness, generosity, mechanical ingenuity, manly independence, capacious good sense. To read this book is a moral tonic. It is a lesson in life. It makes us happier and better. And while it does this, it presents more entertaining matter and more wisdom than any book we know of, in conversation, in personal gossip about well known people.

From the London Quarterly Review.

The letters do credit to his genius, his heart, and his understanding. They are a proof of the cleanness of his conceptions, the vigor and brevity of his statements, and the perennial festivity of his conversation.

LEARNING TO TALK.

OR,

ENTERTAINING AND INSTRUCTIVE LESSONS IN THE USE OF LANGUAGE.

BY JACOB ABBOTT.

Illustrated with 175 Engravings. Small 4to., muslin, 50c.

This book is intended for very young children—commencing, indeed, at the age when they first begin to understand the meaning of language. It is intended not principally to amuse them, but to benefit and improve them by promoting an early and a right development of their thinking powers, and furnishing their minds in the mean time, with a fund of useful information. It is recommended by all persons who have examined this work, that it surpasses everything that has been, or can be invented for the same purpose, and must entirely supersede all hand copying, Slates and Pencils, or any hand.

majority that may prevailing the Know Nothing party, that a central Know Nothing government.

What then remains to dash and bulk up the Free-soil and Abolition majority against it? Was it not the Nebraska bill? Does any one question it? Was not that measure concocted in a secret council of seven persons? Secretly sent and endorsed by the President, and by the influence exerted through Congress by the union of the platform of both political parties, proclaimed at Baltimore, that not the President given authorized pledges that he would discourage the agitation of the Slavery question in and out of Congress and elsewhere? Were these pledges redeemed by him? Was not this measure the first thing to revive the agitation since 1850? No candid man will dispute the contrary.

It was suggested by moderate men at the North, such Democrats, who always stood by the South, as a matter of good faith; and they either opposed the Administration, or would not give it their support. This measure caused positive expressions of disgusted by many who aided in electing the President. But there were other causes, and all united, gave rise to the American Order. The selection of the Presidential Cabinet, although it was highly acceptable to the Democratic party, they made an effort to swallow it. General discontent was growing up in the country. This feeling was aggravated by a report that an agreement was made between a Catholic Bishop and Gen. PIERCE, conditioned that Gen. PIERCE was to receive the Catholic vote, and in the event of his election, a situation in his Cabinet should be given to a member of the Catholic denomination. As this was published and not denied, it was believed. Nor was this all—foreigners were selected to fill important missions to foreign Governments, to the exclusion of American statesmen. About this time it was ascertained that an unusual number of convicts and paupers were thrown upon our shores from European prisons and poor-houses. The belief obtained that these classes of emigrants were thrust upon us by the policy of foreign Governments, who never can hear us good will, as long as we remain a free and independent people. These facts, in connection with general discontent towards the Administration, with threats made in Catholic newspapers and periodicals, seemed at once to arouse the people and admonish them to prepare for the apprehended contest. The cry was then raised by the Anti-Americans that the objects of the American Order was the proscription of Catholics and foreigners. This I deny! The threats and denunciations came from the Catholic journals, which gave the alarm to Protestants and Americans. The design of the American Order is not to put down Catholics, but to prevent Catholics putting down Protestants. The members of the Order would not, nor do they intend to interfere with the Catholic religion, or their mode of worship; but at the same time we are not willing to place power in the hands of those who acknowledge or owe temporal allegiance to any foreign prince, king or potentate. Again, it is said the principles of the American Order proscribe foreigners, and are intended to extend the period of naturalization. I do not regard this principle as proscriptive. I understand foreigners to be protected in the full enjoyment of all their civil rights, and exercising whatever religious opinions or mode of worship they may prefer. No one wishes to abridge these privileges.

The possession and exercise of political rights are distinct matters. Females and minors possess and enjoy civil rights, yet they are not capable of exercising the political right of suffrage. This is a constitutional right of all qualified natives. The extension of that right to those who are not natives, is a matter of grace and favor of the Congress and of the Constitution. Congress has the power to invest foreigners with the right upon such conditions as may be thought proper and expedient for the well-being of the Republic.

The teachers of the modern school, who claim to be the only Democrats or patriots in the country, admit "that some modification in the naturalization laws might be well enough." They take care not to say how far they are willing to go. Are they willing to extend the period of probation to twenty-one years? If they are not, I am. If such laws were passed they could not affect those who are already naturalized, and who enjoy the full benefits of our institutions.

Nor would it prejudice the claims of those who might have reached the American soil at the time of the passage, or going into operation of such laws. Such a measure, I should think, ought to be hailed by naturalized foreigners and those whose claims to naturalization have commenced with as much joy as if they were native Americans. If not on their own account, they should at least, hail it on account of their children. The foreigners who have been naturalized in our country are generally of a class, who would feel it a poor compliment paid them to place convicts and paupers on a footing of equality with them; or to say that such beings were entitled to the considerations which are due the naturalized citizens.

I am in favor of excluding from our shores persons who cannot come to the country with a certificate from our consular agents in the country which they leave, representing them as persons of good character; or if they have been guilty of political offences in their country, to state the same, that a proper allowance might be made by our government. I am becoming suspicious of the teachers in these days of UTILITARIAN politics. And before I enlist under the leaders of modern Democracy I wish to known of them whether they stand on the JACKSON, or CALHOUN platform. Between their platforms there was an essential difference. JACKSON's was the Constitution and the Union. This is the platform upon which I stand, and if, as has been asserted, the American party is down, the battle over and victory won, I shall only feel mortified to witness, at my period of life, after having looked upon so many vicissitudes of my country, to see an Anti-American feeling triumph. One consolation, at least, will be left me. While the triumphs of American principles were reverberating throughout the Union, I was silent. When these principles are said to be in eclipse, I come forward with cheerfulness and declare that I believe the salvation of my country is only to be secured by adherence to the principles of the American order.

A triumph is claimed by Anti-Americans, based on the supposition that all Councils will be broken up, from the fact that some withdrawals have and may continue to take place. In all cases within my knowledge, where withdrawals have occurred, a greater number were added to the Order than seceders. Occasionally men have joined the Order from motives which did little credit to its principles, and remained members for months. Their motives can only be inferred from their actions. They remained quietly until nominations were made, in which they were not quite so fortunate as they much desired to be. Those persons soon after withdrew from the Order, denouncing it as an "UNHOLY, DARK LANTERN SOCIETY."

In many cases, seceders have regarded themselves as highly qualified teachers of the new-fangled politics in Texas. But not of the good old Jefferson and Jackson Democracy. The present is a momentous epoch in the annals of our country.

A vast responsibility devolves upon us. We are acting in the present but for all future generations. We are accountable to posterity. We have received a heritage from our fathers. Shall we regard it with care, and transmit it unimpaired to our children? Shall we remain Americans? Shall we remain national? or shall we surrender ourselves to demagogues and party leaders? Or shall we sell our birthright for a mess of pottage?

We have a high and holy duty to perform to our country, and if we, as Americans, cannot maintain and preserve our freedom! is it possible, or even probable, that we will find a safer depository in the hands of foreigners, or the satellites of a Pope? whose system of religion pursues all American Protestants with denunciations while living, and denies their bodies burial after death in Catholic countries. Is it a crime or even a fault in Americans who seek to resist an influence so adverse to the principles of free Government? Is it proscription to fortify ourselves against all encroachments upon religious, or political freedom? If it is wrong, then I am wrong. If it is right, then I will maintain the right.

Your friend and fellow-citizen,
SAMUEL HOUSTON.

Gen. Thomas J. Rusk on the Same Subject, With Some Others.

From the Henderson (Texas) Democrat.
NACOGDOCHES, Saturday, June 30, 1855.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 20th inst. has been received. At the time it reached here I was away from home, or it would have been answered sooner.

The attempts which you mention as having been made to produce the impression that I favored the Know-Nothing movement, are entirely erroneous and without foundation. I have regarded their effects, from the beginning, as intended to secure office and political power, without any other means or by any other than as far as they were likely to secure the object.

The ostensible hostility to Catholics and foreigners, as well as the bold pretensions of reform, doubtless gained them many adherents. Many that returned Gen. SCOTT to the war was so charged with the "Know Nothing Conspiracy" and the "secret Council Chamber." This is authoritatively proved by the fact that I was informed by the Know Nothing Governor, recently last in Philadelphia.

That a few patriotic Democrats have joined them I have no doubt, but a large majority are disappointed aspirants for office, Whigs and Abolitionists.

Their secrecy is highly objectionable. No party can be safely trusted with power who do not openly and distinctly avow their principles. The oaths which it is intimated they take are illegal, inconsistent and subversive with the fundamental principles of our Government. They are a direct encroachment upon the personal liberty and intellectual responsibility which is the very ground work of our free institutions. It is the highest privilege as well as the sacred duty of every American citizen to vote for measures and men under the guidance of his own best judgment. How can he, surrender that right to a midnight Council, and bind himself by oath to carry out what they may dictate, and fulfill his obligations to himself, his country and his God as a freeman? The thing is absurd! He must, in the very nature of things, frequently go against either his judgment or his oath; and that, too, in cases where the most vital interest of his country may be involved.

I, however, regard the Know-Nothing party as already broken down. They have been signally overthrown in Virginia, where they boasted of great strength. Many of the leading patriotic Whigs, especially in the Southern States, have not only refused to join, but have made war upon them. At the North, as all the elections show, they are Abolitionists. At the South they profess to be pro-Slavery men. How can such a party succeed? The Whigs are disorganized if not disbanded; no one can mistake the rock on which they split.

The field is therefore open to the Democracy, and our course and policy, to my judgment, is clear and unmistakable. If we desire to succeed as a party, and to secure the best interests of the country, we must drive out of our ranks that cursed faction of Free-Soilers and Abolitionists, who, determined to rule or ruin, have distracted, demoralized the Union, and brought defeat upon our party. We cannot get along with them. Mr. POLK kept a number of them in office; they showed their gratitude by keeping up confusion in the ranks, and then caused the defeat of Gen. CASS. Gen. PIERCE, no doubt with good intentions, placed many of them in office. The result has been disastrous; they have brought confusion and distrust into the ranks of the party, and serious injury to the Administration.

They may threaten, if driven out, to defeat the Democratic party. I do not believe they have the power, but if they have, I would prefer defeat to my share of the victory, with such men. If we were free from this incubus, many talented, influential and patriotic Whigs would join us, and true men everywhere would rally to our standard.

I think it is a great mistake to suppose that the Free-Soilers can control the Northern and Western States; my judgment is, that if the Democracy will sustain, as they ought to do, such men as are not tinctured with this heresy at the North and West, the true Democracy will soon put down the Abolitionists in most of the non-slaveholding States.

I have no desire to conceal my opinions. You can speak of them as you think proper, but my letter has been written in a hurry and without leisure for revision, and not with a view to publication. I regard the battle with the Know-Nothings as over and the victory won, and to come out now and publish a letter might look like I wished to appropriate to myself the credit justly due to others.

Truly your friend, THOS. J. RUSK.
M. N. ECTOR, Esq.

EPIDEMICS.

Yellow Fever at Norfolk.

From the Norfolk Herald of Tuesday.
MAYOR'S OFFICE, NORFOLK, Monday, Aug. 13, 1855.

It having been recommended to me by the clergy, and numerous citizens of Norfolk, that an early day be set aside as a suitable occasion for prayer to the Almighty, that He would look down upon the afflicted city with compassion, and in His infinite mercy stay the dreadful scourge that is prevailing to some extent at present in our midst.

Therefore I, HUNTER WOODS, Mayor of Norfolk, believing that such an observance is fit and proper, but highly becoming a Christian community, would set aside to-day, (the 14th inst.,) as a public day of penitence and prayer, and earnestly request my fellow citizens to pay all due respect to the same, and to suspend all business operations during its continuance. HUNTER WOODS.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH,
NORFOLK, Monday, Aug. 13, 1855.

Report of deaths in the city by the fever during the 48 hours ending this day, at 3 P. M.:

Mrs. RUSSELL, aged 63 years, and daughter, 34, on Westover's wharf; Mrs. KNEA, 40, in BROWN's lane; WM. WICKER, aged 56, Duke-street, occupation in the infected district; JOHN B. STAPLETON, 38, from the Navy-Yard; Mr. A. KAYTON, 60, Main-street, (opposite Bank-street;) —— TAYLOR, a lad of 17, at the Emmett House, Union-street; —— BROWN, 50, in Williamson's lane, head of a family that moved from Barry's row the night of the fire—total, 8. In the Hospital, 3.

T. G. BROUGHTON, Secretary.

DISTRESSING OCCURRENCE.—About 2 o'clock last Sabbath, a stranger, carrying an oil-cloth bag in his hand, was seen staggering in Main-street, opposite Bank, it was supposed from the effect of liquor; but on turning into the entry to go up a flight of stairs to Dr. CONSTABLE's office, he fell, and in less than fifteen minutes expired. Upon inquiry it appeared that he was one of several boarders at a house which had been closed, and he was left in it sick with the fever, without attendance or necessaries of any kind; that in the last stage of the disease, when the victim is mocked with the deceptive consciousness of returning health, he went out in order to procure a permit to go to the hospital—but had just strength to reach the spot mentioned when he became exhausted, and death closed the scene. His name, we learn, was STAPLETON, an Irishman, about two years in the country, and had been employed in the navy-yard. In somewhat more than an hour he was taken away in a hearse for interment.

The houses at the Lambert's Point race-course have been rented and fitted up for the accommodation of the sick, who were removed there from the temporary hospital near Oak Grove yesterday afternoon. The situation, though more remote from the city, being about four miles distant by land, and three by water, is in all respects an eligible one.

Cholera at Fort Riley—Additional News.

From the Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.
FORT LEAVENWORTH, K. T., Aug. 8, 1855.

The least railroad accident, steamboat explosion, &c., with sometimes very little damage, is duly reported to you; I consider it, therefore, my duty, to give you an account of the ravages caused by cholera at Fort Riley, K. T.

Some two weeks ago, Major OGDEN, with four hundred citizens, mechanics, stone-cutters, laborers, &c. went out to Fort Riley, for the purpose of erecting buildings and stables to be occupied during the coming winter by some dragoon companies.

Until last Wednesday the whole command was very healthy, and got along well with their buildings, when the cholera made its appearance, and in 48 hours—i. e., from Wednesday until Friday noon, it took forty-five to fifty persons to a better world.

Major OGDEN died last Friday. The wife and two children of Major WOODS, the wife of Major ARMISTEAD; Sixth Infantry, and forty-five or forty-six citizens, died. All the troops had left, except the Band and Staff of the Sixth Infantry, one of which, the Quartermaster's-Sergeant, died also.

Yours, C. N.

Inhospitable Treatment of Citizens of Norfolk and Portsmouth.

From the Norfolk Beacon, Aug. 14.

The inhospitable treatment of the citizens of Norfolk and Portsmouth by all the neighboring towns is without precedent. During the visitation of yellow fever in 1821 and 1826, the adjacent towns gave some expression of sympathy and humane feeling; but in 1855 we find the sanious "young America" which has risen up, instead of following the hum and conduct of their fathers, giving evidence of their barbarity in every possible mode, such as stopping steamers and cars, and threatening with a shower of bullets any poor soul who, fleeing from the pestilence, dares to touch their soil. We find Baltimore, Richmond, and even the little town of Suffolk, Smithfield, Weldon, E City and Hampton, not only not offering succor, but positively forbidding, under pains and penalties, all persons from coming within their respective limits, and excluding all goods, wares and merchandise from either town from being brought within their boundaries. And to cap the climax, Col. WRIGHT, the military commandant at Portsmouth, has stationed armed sentinels to prevent anybody from landing on any part of the Point, even outside the garrison. We do not complain of necessitous sanitary measures, though the yellow fever is not contagious, and there is no danger in painlessly to those who are sick, in the infected regions to which they may go, but the excessive cordon, and want of humanity, constitute the outrage of which we complain.

We are glad to see that the Petersburg Express condemns the action of the Councils of Richmond in requesting the James River boats to discontinue their trips to that city.

Treatment of the Yellow Fever.

Captain Isaac P. Lave, late of the U. S. Transport ship American, who treated hundreds of cases of yellow fever under treatment, says he never knew of a case terminating fatally after observing the following directions: Dissolve in a wine glass of water, a table spoonful of common salt, and pour the same into a tumbler, adding the juice of a whole lemon, and two wine glasses of castor oil. The whole to be taken at one dose, (by an adult.) Then a hot mustard foot-bath, with a handful of salt in the water—the patient to be well wrapped in blankets, until perspiration takes place freely. On removal to bed, the feet of the patient to be wrapped in the blanket. Afterwards, apply mustard plasters to the abdomen, legs and soles of the feet. If the headache is very acute, apply mustard plasters to the head and temples. After the fever has been broken, take forty grains of quinine and forty drops of elixir of vitriol to a quart of water. Dose—wine glass full three times a day. Barley water, lemonade and ice water, may be used in moderation.

Invasion of Mexico.

From the New-Orleans Picayune, Aug. 8.

The Texas mails of this morning bring us accounts of an organization of a military force within the United States, and in aid of the revolution in Northern Mexico. The San Antonio Ledger of the 28th contains a letter from its correspondent, dated at Leone River, on the 19th of July, detailing "the movements of the auxiliary force intended for the overthrow of the SANTA ANNA Government in Mexico, and the establishment of a Government favorable to the interests of Texas." The first part of the expedition arrived at that place on the 15th ult., and men were said to be coming in hourly in great numbers, and to be expected with great anxiety on the other side of the river. The party was expected to cross within five days—that is to say, about the 24th ult. They are under the command of Capt. W. B. HENRY, late of the Texan volunteers.

Accompanying this correspondence is an address by Capt. HENRY to the people of Texas, and a proclamation addressed to the Mexicans.

The address to the people of Texas announces the purpose of himself and his companions "to engage in the revolution now existing in the Mexican Republic, to displace the far-famed SANTA ANNA, and establish a new republican form of government—a government more favorable to the interests of Texas, enlightened in its views, and with the final intention of extending the proud American Eagle over its protection."

He appeals to Texas, in the strength of her revolutionary experience and example, and incites them by representing the bordering country of Mexico as the refuge of Indian marauders, who perpetrate crimes, robberies and murders within Texas, which distress "all lovers of peace and order." It is on the interest of "peace and order" that Mexico is invaded.

The proclamation to the Mexicans, published alongside of the other in the same paper, talks much more mildly than that intended for the Texans. It does not have a word about extending the American eagle over Mexico, but declares the wish to see the Mexicans govern themselves.

"Our only wish, the only reward we seek for, and with which we shall return happy to our firesides, is to see established the federal system, and to secure treaties by which the interests of both countries shall be protected, and which will allow us to exchange our products with yours, without fear of molestation, under the protection of just and equitable tariffs, thus giving a new impulse to the prosperity of both countries."

Nothing is stated in this paper to give us an idea of the numbers collected for this foray across the borders.

The Austin State Times, of the 28th ult., says, within a few weeks more than twenty runaway negroes have passed at no great distance from that city, on their way to Mexico, and adds:

"The number of negroes fleeing from their masters and endeavoring to reach Mexico, makes it imperiously necessary something should be done to arrest the evil. We can see no more feasible plan than the one long since suggested. By aiding the liberal party in Mexico we may accomplish an arrangement which will make Slavery as secure in Texas as any State in the Union."

The New-Orleans Delta regards the success of the revolutionists in Mexico as already certain, and with reference to the result says: that next to the removal of all restrictions on commercial intercourse between Mexico and this country, the most important benefit of both nationalities will be the opening of the former to emigration from the United States:

"The statesmen who lead the present revolution are thoroughly aware of the fact to which we allude, and have pledged themselves not only to overthrow SANTA ANNA himself, but his policy also. We cannot regard their success, therefore, as a mere change of dynasties, to which Mexico is somewhat accustomed. We believe it will mark the opening of a new and propitious era in the history of the country. In free commercial intercourse and unrestricted emigration, we perceive the only chance of reconstruction, and on that account we sympathize warmly with the cause of ALVAREZ and his friends. Let them go ahead!"

From the Daily True Delta of Aug. 8.

A correspondent of the San Antonia Ledger, writing from Leona river, July 19th, says:

"I embrace the first opportunity offered to inform you of the movements of the auxiliary forces intended for the overthrow of the SANTA ANNA Government in Mexico, and the establishment of a Government favorable to the interests of Texas. The first of the expedition arrived here on the 15th inst., and everything appears favorable to the cause. The men are coming in hourly and in numbers. Information has reached here of great interest to the cause."

The people are said to be anxious on the opposite bank of the river, for the arrival of the auxiliary troops from Texas. Great enthusiasm prevails among the men. In less than five days the first party will cross the Rio Grande. Captain HENRY, of the late Texas volunteers, is expected to be in command for the present. I enclose you his address to the people of Texas, which you will please publish, and also the pronunciamiento or proclamation intended to be circulated among the Mexicans, on the arrival of the auxiliaries. It is to be hoped that the people of Texas will come forward in the matter and give that aid, which is expected at their hands. Col. JOHN S. FORD is looked for here with great anxiety, and with a considerable reinforcement.

News from the Mountains.

From the Correspondence of the Missouri Republican.
WHITEHEAD, K. T., Monday, Aug. 6, 1855.

G. P. BEAUBAIS, of St. Louis, is in from the mountains, and reports all well with our soldiers, and says the Indians do not intend to fight. He saw RED LEAF and SPOTTED TAIL, the brother and son of OLD BEAR, who told him that they had led the band who had killed and robbed the mail party last Fall, and that they were waiting for the officers of the United States to come and do with them as they pleased. They had believed that they ought to be avenged for BRIAT's death by killing all who belonged to the United States; but since then they had thought that their Great Father at Washington was not responsible for the indiscretions of Lieut. GRATTAN, and had changed their minds, and desired to renew their friendly relations and to be good children; and that they were willing to surrender themselves to death for the peace of their nation.

BEAUBAIS met eleven emigrant trains with wagons and cattle. All were getting along safely. He met our soldiery also, and they were doing well. Some of them had reached Fort Laramie.

A Queer Trial Under the Liquor Law.

Correspondence of the Watertown Reformer.
THERESA, N. Y., Monday, Aug. 6, 1855.

On Friday evening last the first case of infringement of the new Liquor Law in the town of Theresa, was tried before Esquire CORNWALL. The warrant was issued on the application of the Supervisor, FRANKLIN PARKER, Esq. After a very irregular and informal trial, in which it was indisputably proved that the prisoner was very much intoxicated, and that, too, on stolen liquor, the Justice was about to pronounce sentence upon him, when a person present moved "that the prisoner be discharged with more respondent."

The Justice had commenced a "certain lecture" to the condemned, when it was suggested by some one in the room that the Court had no authority for the course he seemed inclined to take. This was unfortunate, for things were going on swimmingly before, and His Honor closed his reprimand in its incipient stage.

The question was debated and dropped. The prosecutor himself then advised the release of the prisoner, and offered to stand "between the Court and all harm." His sentence were these: "the law says, "it shall be unlawful for any person to be or remain intoxicated in any store, grocery, tavern, street or public square, and for each offence he shall be liable to a fine of $10, to be sued for and recovered in the same manner as fines in the fourth section of Revised Statutes." He urged that the world knew, or used to, the above connection, gave the Court the privilege of fining, in such, not $10, or less than one, or of remitting the fine altogether.

After due deliberation, it was unanimously decided that the Court should have until 9 A. M. of Saturday, in which to decide on the intricate points presented.

The costs, on the morning of Saturday, amounted to $3 75, and judgment was rendered for the amount.

The case presents points not heretofore decided in any of the higher courts.

General Land Office—Re-survey of the Base Line in Kansas Territory.

From the Washington Union, Aug. 15.

Instructions were issued some time since to examine the base line in Kansas Territory for sixty miles, in order to test its accuracy. On examination, the whole line was found to be so totally defective that it was deemed indispensable to re-survey and relocate it. This base line, upon the accuracy of which all the other surveys depend, had been completed a distance of one hundred and eight miles west of the Missouri river. It was approved without being tested by the Surveyor-General, upon the oath of the contractor and his men that it was located on the parallel of 40 deg. north latitude; but this approval was not endorsed to cut off or preclude further operation. By recent advices it appears that this base line has been re-surveyed. It is said that the lands lying between the first correction line and the base line are being subdivided into townships. The work is rapidly progressing to an early completion.

A RARE INSTANCE.—The pulpit of the South Church was occupied yesterday, forenoon and afternoon, by two brothers, Rev. BROWN EMERSON, senior pastor of the Church, and Rev. REUBEN EMERSON, of South Reading. The former is in his 70th year, and the latter in his 36th, and both have been pastors of churches more than half a century each. The entire ordinary service of the Sabbath, with the additional labor of the admission of Church members and the administration of the Sacrament, were conducted by the two venerable pastors, indicating a rare degree of mental and physical vigor.—Salem Gazette.

MARKET REPORTS.

Markets—Carefully Reported for New-York Daily Times.
THURSDAY, Aug. 16—6 P. M.

ASHES—The demand is moderate and readily met at $6 25@$6 37½ for Pearls, and $6 12½ for Pots, ⅌ 100 lbs.

COFFEE—Exhibits less activity, without change in value. The sales of the day include 600 pkgs. Java at 14½c., 160 bags Maracaibo at 11½c. all in cash and 400 Rio at 10c. @10½c. ⅌ lb.

COTTON—Notwithstanding the unfavorable tone of the America's accounts, this staple has continued in fair request, and is still pretty firmly held. The receipts are rather light, and the available stock here though moderate in extent, is not pressed upon the market.

NEW-YORK CLASSIFICATION.	Orleans.	Mobile.	Texas.	N.O.&Texas.
Ordinary, ⅌ lb.	9½	9½	9½	9½
Middling	11½	11½	11½	11½
Middling Fair	12	12	12½	12½
Fair	12½	12½	13	13½

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western brands are still on the advance. Light receipts and a limited stock still exert a favorable influence on the market for desirable kinds, which are in fair request for home use, and moderately inquired for by shippers, at every and rates, a further partial improvement of 12½c. ⅌ bbl. having been established to-day. There is not much doing in common qualities, and these are irregular in value. The English advices published this morning have had but little effect on the business. Most of what Flour is offering for sale was made from old Wheat; Flour made out of new Wheat is as yet scarce. Two parcels of new Ohio, respectively branded "Kent's Extra" and "Excelsior Mills," arrived to-day. They were favorably regarded by the trade, the quality being fully as good as the Flour bearing the same brands last year. The day's sales amount to 6,700 bbls. within our revised range:

Inferior State	$8 00 @ 8 12½
Ordinary State	8 12½@ 8 37½
Straight State	8 37½@ 8 50
Favorite and Extra State	8 50 @ 9 25
Mixed Western	8 75 @ 8 87½
Common to good Indiana and Michigan	8 87½@ 9 12½
Fancy Michigan	9 12½@ 9 37½
Common to good Ohio	9 37½@ 9 12½
Fancy Ohio	9 12½@ 9 37½
Extra Ohio	9 50 @11 25
Extra Indiana and Michigan	9 50@10 00
Fancy Genesee	9 62½@10 00
Extra Genesee	10 00@12 50

Canadian is scarce and wanted at full prices. The day's sales consists of 700 bbls. superfine to extra, at $9 50@$10 50, and some at $9@$9 50 ⅌ bbl. Southern still favors farmers. The bulk of the supply now here is from new Wheat. It is not in very great favor with buyers, especially for shipment, but there is a steady increase in the demand for it. The day's transactions add up 2,300 bbls. mixed to extra at $8 75@$10 50 ⅌ bbl. Rye Flour continues scarce, and worth $7@$9 for fine and superfine, ⅌ bbl. Corn Meal is sparingly dealt in, at $4 50@$4 62½ for Jersey, and $4 37½ for Brandywine, ⅌ bbl.

GRAIN—Wheat remains in poor supply and good request at advanced rates. The receipts of new, so far, have been quite limited, and there is not much prospect of their becoming heavier, for a few weeks more. These circumstances enable holders to obtain very high prices. The day's sales reach 17,500 bushels Southern at $2 30@$2 35 for white; and $1 95@$1 96 for red, ⅌ bushel. Rye is still rare and firm. Small sales of new were made to-day at $1 37@$1 39 ⅌ bushel. Barley and Barley Malt are unchanged. Oats are less freely offered, and as the demand has slightly improved, prices exhibit greater firmness; State and Western now bringing 51c.@54c. Corn is more sought after, but its comparative scarcity and enhanced value interfere with transactions. Western mixed is still the most abundant kind, but Southern is coming forward rather more freely, and we may soon expect a good supply of it. It is, perhaps, a little too early to look for new Northern, but this will shortly be arriving in full quantities. The day's movements comprise 52,000 bushels at 90c.@92c. for Western Mixed; and $1 10 for Southern White, ⅌ bushel.

HAY—The market is quiet but firm, as before quoted.

HOPS—Continue inactive and depressed, with only retail sales of last year's crop at 17c.@19c. ⅌ lb.

IRON—About 140 tons Scotch Pig changed hands to-day at $30 50@$31 50, usual terms, ⅌ ton.

LATHS—Are salable and steady at old quotations.

LEAD—Is in rather better demand, but no important sales have been effected and prices are unchanged.

MOLASSES—Some light sales of New-Orleans were reported at 34c.@35c. ⅌ bushel, but the market rules quiet and somewhat unsettled.

NAVAL STORES—Crude Turpentine is held at $3@$3 12½ ⅌ 200 lbs., with a moderate inquiry. Spirits Turpentine is more in request and now commands 42c. ⅌ gallon. Tar and Rosin are without material variation.

OILS—Whale, Sperm and Olive remain as previously reported. There is not much doing in Linseed, but this is pretty stiffly held, at 32½@34c. ⅌ gallon. More inquiry prevails for Lard Oil, which is rare and steady at former figures.

PROVISIONS—Pork is quiet,—the light receipts and enhanced claims of owners impeding operations. The day's sales add up 600 bbls., in lots, at $19 87½ for New Mess; $17 for do. Prime; and $19 62½ for Old Mess, ⅌ bbl. Cut Meats continue quite scarce and somewhat nominal, at 10½c. for Hams, and 9c. for Shoulders—100 kegs Boxed Shoulders brought 10c. Lard is doing better; the day's sales include 600 bbls. and tcs. fair to prime, at 11c.@11½c. ⅌ lb. Beef continues pretty active at full rates; 200 bbls. were disposed of during the day at $9 75@$10 25 for Prime, $11@$13 for Country Mess; $15 50@$16 for repacked Mess, and $17 for extra, &c., ⅌ bbl. Prime Mess Beef continues dull and heavy, within a range of from $12@$25 ⅌ tc. Beef Hams remain inactive and tangled at from $15@$16 ⅌ bbl. Butter is in demand at 15c.@18c. for Ohio; 18c.@22c. for ordinary to good State, and 21c.@24c. for choice do., ⅌ lb. Cheese is selling at from 8c.@9c. ⅌ lb.

RICE—Continues dull and heavy, with only retail sales at $5 87½@$6 50 ⅌ 100 lbs. The receipts are in excess of the wants of buyers and promise to increase. Hence, they exercise a depressive influence.

SOAP—There were 100 boxes Castile purchased at 10½c.@10½c. ⅌ lb.

SUGARS—The market is a little brighter, but not firmer, sales having been made since our last of 500 hhds. Cuba Muscovado, &c., at 5½c.@7½c., and two cargoes of Manila, in bags, to go South, at 6½c. ⅌ lb.

TALLOW—We heard that 18,000 lbs. prime brought 12c. ⅌ lb.

WHISKY—Sales of 250 bbls. Ohio and Prison were effected at 31c.@31½c. ⅌ gallon.

FREIGHTS—Pending the arrival of the America's mails, there was not much disposition to operate, and in consequence the engagements to-day were very moderate, with increased heaviness in rates. Produce continued so rare and dear that it was almost out of the reach of shippers. This circumstance also retarded the business.

OILS AND PAINTS.

CORSERNE'S EXTRA OIL IS WARRANTED OF every essential quality for machinery and burning. Being manufactured perfectly free from gum, it works freely and perfectly satisfactorily on machinery, and will burn equally well in the lamp. For mechanical, night and other purposes, it has been in use largely for the past eight years, and is a favorite oil with our principal manufacturers, cotton mills, shine shops, factories, &c. Barrels 35 to 40 gallons each. Warranted uniformly good, or may be returned at the expense of the agent's only agent, JOHN W. QUINCY, No. 25 William-st., corner of Pine.

NEW-YORK CITY.

A Sad Hour in the Tombs.

When he was born, of whom we have now to speak, there was lamentation in the parsonage at ——, a sweet English village, in the Lake District, embosomed among hills, which there they call mountains—Skiddaw, not unknown to fame on this side of the Atlantic, being of the number. His father was the respected pastor of the village. His mother, on that sad morning when she gave him, new-born, to her husband, folded her hands upon her breast and went her way to God.

He grew, as befitted the son of such a father, with the amenities of life a well-tutored and apt boy. The stripling was tall, well formed and handsome. He was the beautiful young Apollo of the neighborhood, beloved by young and old, and well deserving their love. His father had pride in him, for he and that marble tombstone in the churchyard were all that were left to the old man in this world.

First at Harrow, and afterwards at Oxford, the youth gained among the tutors and his fellow students the reputation of a promising, and even a studious scholar. His acquaintance with the classic tongues was superior to that of any collegian of his time, while to the other usual studies he added French, German, Italian and Spanish, which he soon learned to read with ease and speak with fluency. His father received flattering accounts of him. The old man, lonely among the hills, was proud in his loneliness. He had a son of whom he was not ashamed.

A profession being offered him, he chose that of a physician, having decided on the study of Medicine. His natural bent was for the sea, however. Perhaps his father would have preferred the sea, as a holy vocation. But he yielded his wishes with the least manifestation of disappointment, and the young man set himself down to assiduous study, under a surgeon of great repute.

He was well endowed, indeed, by Nature, for his preceptor expressed his astonishment at the rapidity and exactness with which he mastered the difficult branches of his art. For him was reserved a splendid career. His name would be enrolled with the benefactors of humanity. The world would talk of him, as of a Hunter, a Jenner, or a Blumenbach. The old man was indeed very proud among the hills.

Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and subsequently of the College of Physicians, and rising to a point of importance and emolument in ——— Hospital, in point of rank and useful[illegible] the first in London. To this preferment he had arrived at the age of twenty-eight years, being long traveled on the Continent, and studied some time in the Medical Schools of Paris. There was some talk, too, that his father would see him ere he died, and that he hoped to place his lips upon the forehead of his young wife. Poor old man, so happy, though in his humble, all goes well with thee. She is there yonder, and they have awaited thee these many years; but thou must first, then expect, not [illegible] upon thy knee, and wonder whether the angels in Heaven have knowledge of what passes upon earth.

Nay, die rather first, old man. Thou art aged, and thy minds are nearly run out. Make haste to die, that thou mayest not find thy grave with a sad heart. But she is taken away from the evil to come. There is comfort in that thought.

At the age the old man did not think that he should have to journey to London, where he had been but once since his own college days. But he arrives in that Babylon at a late hour one night, and seeks a hotel for rest, while the drunkards reeled through the streets, the harlots and disguised with liquor was the voice of one anywhere, that he did not recognize it. Wearied as he was, he might not have slept at all, or would have slept less sound, if he had.

His son was not at home, nor at the hospital, they said, the next morning. They did not know where he was. But he would come? Perhaps—certainly, but he was uncertain in his hours. They wished and opened the old man.

From the small wine-glass to the brimmed brandy-goblet, repeatedly filled at an early hour in the day, our A. M. Czoniecnis, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, of the College of Physicians, and Resident Physician at ——— Hospital, had hurried so soon. The story is soon told. Rumors of the sort, though far weaker than the reality, had reached his father. When the old man was brought to his bedside, by one who discovered him, through the agency of a dissolute associate, he was insensible, exhausted by the effects of excess a week. When he was able to recognize his father, and tell the sad tale, he confessed that he had been a secret drinker for many years; that the habit had been growing on him since he left college, where, indeed, it was first formed. But he would reform; yes—yes, he would reform. The old man returned to his villages partially comforted, but many an eye noticed that he had grown much older, in appearance, during that short absence in London.

Older, and his white locks whiter, and his step weaker and uncertain. He could not preach now, nor pray, as he was wont. His curate must take his place wholly. He would sit in a pew, only as a lay worshipper. Poor old man.

It is a very cold January morning, when he again leaves his parsonage for another journey to London. It is a long journey, of fifteen hours. When he reaches the Hotel, he looks full, and they have to put him to bed, like an infant. And the next day, as he seems more helpless, they ask him for directions, and send for his son. They fear to communicate the tidings, but as they have only strangers' sympathy for him, they do so, without preparation. His son is in prison. Not committed for crime. Oh, no, but for violence, under the influence of intoxication. That is all; but he speaks no more, the old man. In three rooms beneath that marble grave stone for another tenant! Do we know them, our dear ones, when we join them above?

Reputation gone, and someone preying on him, what shall he now do? There is a world elsewhere. As an Englishman, it is natural he should seek English territory. Aided by his friends with a large sum of money, a ship bears him to Canada, where he will indeed reform, and repent with many tears. Her, who should have been his wife, he has left behind. He will send for her and wed her, when years have gone by.

But the happier days do not arrive. There is beauty in Canada, and he cannot resist it. He must again be a fugitive, most of his money spent. He reaches Boston, and for nearly a year seems to do well. He gathers friends around him, and gets into good practice. If he drinks now, it is secretly and rarely—so he thinks so—is the wiser. He plays at cards, chess, billiards, &c. They imprison people in Boston for asset drunkenness, and one evening, when unnerved to excess, he found himself incarcerated.

In the Fall of 1854, he came to New-York. His money was gone, and his friends refused to remit him any more from England. For some time he kept afloat, just drifting on the surface of decent society, not yet submerged. The least eddy would sweep him full shallop, and that eddy ever ready. Where stronger men might have braved a whirlpool, he was helpless. Insane, in his desire for drink, and having no means to procure it, he pawned a Gruebner composition of his watch, and pledged it. We saw him two weeks since in the Tombs, and gave a sad heart with him, glossing this history. Reader, it is not fiction, but very stern truth. He pleaded guilty last week, before the City Judge, as the Court of Sessions, and is now undergoing punishment. His name we withhold, though the records of the Court will furnish it to the curious. What moral we can derive from his history and his misery, let us derive.

Presentation.

The officers and teachers of Sabbath School No. 59, connected with the Second Reformed Presbyterian Church in this City, Rev. Spencer L. Finney, pastor, on Monday evening last presented, with a series of resolutions, a splendid Family Bible with gold clasps and silver plates, with an appropriate inscription, to Robert Patterson, Esq., late Alderman of the Fifth Ward, in testimony of their appreciation of his services, as Superintendent of that School for the last twenty years. He does not retire from the field, but has entered upon the twenty-first year of his faithful labor. Such an instance of devotion to the cause is worthy of record, and the presentation is quite as honorable to the teachers, as to the worthy recipient.—N. Y. Observer.

Run Over Accidents.

Conley McCarty, a boy residing at No. 20 Thames-street, was run over in Broadway by a horse and light wagon driven by one Bedell, of No. 20 Bayard-street. McCarty was dangerously injured; he was conveyed to the New-York Hospital. No blame attached to the driver, his horse having become unmanageable from fright as he passed a band of music which was playing at the time.

James Martin was run over in Broadway by a horse and wagon; he was badly injured. He was conveyed to the New-York Hospital.

Accident by Machinery.

James Graves had his arm broken in the machinery connected with Davidson & Young's bakery, at Nos. 262 and 264 Front-street, at an early hour yesterday morning. He was conveyed to the City Hospital by Officer Thompson, of the Fourth District Police.

Fell from a Shed.

A young woman named Johanna Conely fell from a shed into the yard of house No. 125 Cedar-street, severely bruising her body, and it is feared internally injuring herself. She was conveyed to the City Hospital.

Foundling.

A male infant, a few days of age, was found in the area of the house, No. 15 Lexington-avenue, and conveyed to the Almshouse.

Population of the City—Defence of the Census Marshals.

No. 119 Chambers-street, Aug. 15, 1855.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The leading article in the Times of this morning does great injustice to the Census Marshals of this City. If there has been any decrease in the population of certain Wards, they are not responsible. The truth is there has been a great falling off in the population of the lower part of the City by the breaking up of boarding houses and the removal of families to the upper Wards, the neighboring towns and to the West, consequently diminishing the general increase in the City.

The great decrease in emigration within a year or two has also been a drawback to the growth of the City. Several of the wards have been divided since the last National and State Censuses. In 1845 there were seventeen wards, and in 1850 there were nineteen wards, while there are now twenty-two wards. The former population of the Sixteenth and Nineteenth Wards is no criterion to form any comparisons of the growth of those wards. The Twenty-second Ward has been taken from the Nineteenth Ward, and the Twentieth from the Sixteenth Ward. The great increase in population of Brooklyn, Hoboken, Jersey City, Newark and many of the neighboring towns in Westchester County, and on Long Island, has been occasioned, in a great measure, by the removal of New-Yorkers to those localities.

Various complaints have been sent to my office by the heads of families now out of town, and by other persons who supposed they might have been omitted by the Census Marshals, but in every instance I found that the Marshals had obtained the necessary information from some member of the family, board-r, or neighbor, with the exception of a case in the Fourth Ward, where, by the fault of the person responding to the questions put by the Marshal, several boarders were omitted, which led to a correspondence with the Secretary of State, and the examination of the whole affair. The person complaining admitted it was his own fault and not that of the Marshal, who put all the necessary questions to the form. One of our City papers a day or two ago published a communication complaining of the non-visitation of several houses in the Seventh Ward by a Census Marshal, but the next day the same paper published a retraction of the charge from the quarter whence it emanated.

Our labors have been perplexing and embarrassing enough without all this fault-finding about the non performance of our sworn duty. If those disposed to fault-finding would visit every nook and corner of this City, from the Battery to the High Bridge, as we have had to do, they would soon get sick and tired of census taking—a thankless job at best, for which we are illy compensated.

Trusting that you will publish this defence of the Census Marshals, in view of the fact that our claims for services rendered are now before the Board of Supervisors, I remain yours, truly,

D. C. HENDERSON,
Secretary of the Marshals.

Dust-Controller.—Mr. Wilkinson has invented a "Dust Controller" which must be of extraordinary service to consumptives and others who being sick cannot endure the dust created by sweeping a carpet or floor. It is exceedingly simple, but very effectual. It is a light tin apparatus, which is kept by the sweeper, just ahead of the broom, and from our observation and the testimony of some who have the care of consumptive patients, we are enabled to speak of its utility in high terms of praise. For sale at No. 144 Bowery, by Richard E. Peterson.

Abolition Excitement.

From the Cass County (Mo.) Gazette, Aug. 4.

Our citizens were somewhat excited last week, by the discovery of a scheme formed by several negroes in the vicinity to run away. The discovery of the plot was brought about in the following manner:

A negro man, the property of Mr. C. F. Morehly, of this County, had run away, and was arrested at Baptiste's, in Kansas Territory, by Rev. Mr. Farmer, our fellow townsman, who brought him here and lodged him in jail. His owner and others, suspecting the interference of Abolitionists and that the work might be extensively ramified, interrogated the runaway and obtained the names of several negroes who had contemplated a trip to their sympathizing friends in Kansas; and in addition to this intelligence, by diligent inquiry, ascertained that the improper conversation of some, and downright advice of a few white men, had tended to induce these deluded slaves to prove faithless to kind and indulgent masters, who have their temporal and spiritual welfare more at heart than the miserable and wicked fanatics that incite them to run away.

Several of the negroes implicated, being separately examined, charged one Martin Gallagher, an Irish laborer, with having advised them to seek for freedom, and that he pointed out to them the way to Kansas Territory, where they would be protected by the Abolitionists. Gallagher, when accused of his participation in the plot, admitted his guilt, and begged for mercy. He was ordered to leave the State by a certain day, and not to go to Kansas. In due time he left.

A preacher of the Northern Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Wylie, accused of having promulgated publicly, Abolition sentiments, and his case became the care of our citizens, who assembled in a public meeting at the Court-House, on 27th of July, and appointed committees to investigate the charges.

After protracted and careful deliberation, it was considered that Rev. Mr. Wylie's sentiments savored too thoroughly of Abolitionism; and that in a public capacity he had made himself obnoxious to the serious charge alleged against him, that it was necessary for the peace and harmony of the county that he leave the State. And therefore it was resolved, that Rev. Mr. Wylie be required to leave the State within seven days, with the injunction not to go into the adjoining territory.

Afterwards, on motion, a fund was raised to assist in defraying his traveling expenses; whereupon Mr. Wylie, who was present, consented to leave immediately. Mr. Wylie had a public hearing, and was treated with gentlemanly politeness—and he acquiesced without a murmur in the wishes of the large concourse present.

We understand Mr. Wylie left forthwith.

Burglar Caught in Allegheny.

From the Pittsburg Gazette, Aug. 14.

At last it is our pleasure to record the apprehension of one of that notorious gang of housebreakers and midnight robbers, who have for some months past been operating so extensively in Allegheny.

On Sunday morning last the house of James McGrew was entered through a window in the back building. The burglar entered the sleeping room of Mr. McGrew, and, after ransacking the apartment, seized the pantaloons of Mr. McG. and started. The noise he made while going out awakened Mrs. McGrew, who immediately gave the alarm, and aroused her husband and the other male members of the family. They succeeded in overhauling the rascal and taking him into custody. On his person were found $109 in paper money, about $60 in gold, and a quantity of silver change, sufficient to make in all about $200. A valuable gold watch, a bottle of chloroform, and a bunch of matches were also taken from him.

He gave his name as John Russell.

Subsequently the police received such information as led them to believe that the prisoner knew the whereabouts of the other watches stolen from Mr. Wertz. They accordingly proceeded to a board-pile on the Allegheny wharf, near the Perry Hotel, and in a small aperture under a pile of boards they discovered eight watches, which were afterwards recognized by Mr. Wertz as his property. Two watches are still missing. When Russell found that the other watches had been recovered from his place of concealing them, he became more communicative and stated that he was a native of Providence, R. I., that for some nine months past he has been working in Lancaster, Penn., and only arrived in this city last week, the very day before he entered Mr. Wertz's house. He gave evidence of being an expert and professional burglar, and his face indicates a large degree of intelligence. He is a mulatto, with hair inclined to curl, and is about 28 or 30 years of age.

Loss of the Steamer Kate Swinney.

From the St. Louis Republican, Aug. 13.

The officers of the steamer F. X. Aubry, from St. Joseph yesterday morning, bring intelligence of the sinking of the steamer Kate Swinney in the Missouri River, at the foot of Vermillion—three hundred miles above Council Bluffs.

The Kate Swinney was one of the boats chartered by Government to carry stores up the Missouri, and had been at Fort Pierre, her destination, discharged her cargo and was returning, without freight, when the accident occurred. She struck a stump or snag, which tore away nearly the whole bottom of the hull, and sank in thirty feet water in about five minutes. The officers and crew made their escape in the yawl and life-boat, but lost nearly the whole of their baggage, which had been placed in the ladies cabin. The sinking was so sudden that nothing could be saved from the wreck. The Aubry brought down Mr. Proctor, pilot, and Mr. Black, carpenter, and six others of the crew who reached St. Joseph, a distance of 600 miles, in the life-boat. They report that several bands of uncouth barbarians exhibited themselves at various points along the shore, making signs for them to stop and have a talk, but they not wishing to cultivate their acquaintance more intimately, prudently concluded that it was wisest to go ahead.

They all arrived in safety at St. Joseph, and took the first boat down.

Captain Chouteau and others of the officers and crew were on their way to St. Joseph—part of them by land, and the remainder in the boat's yawl, which is very large and commodious for such an occasion. They will probably arrive here on the next boat, which will be the New Lucy. The Kate Swinney was a very good boat, valued at $20,000; and insured in offices in this city for $15,500. She was owned by Captain Chouteau, her commander, and Mr. Asa Hopkins, clerk. Captain Chouteau sold the wreck before he left for $300, to a party of emigrants who were building a village near the spot where she sank, and who immediately commenced the operation of wrecking.

Abolition Excitement.

Our citizens were somewhat excited last week, by the discovery of a scheme formed by several negroes in the vicinity to run away. The discovery of the plot was brought about in the following manner:

A negro man, the property of Mr. C. F. Morehly, of this County, had run away, and was arrested at Baptiste's, in Kansas Territory, by Rev. Mr. Farmer, our fellow townsman, who brought him here and lodged him in jail. His owner and others, suspecting the interference of Abolitionists and that the work might be extensively ramified, interrogated the runaway and obtained the names of several negroes who had contemplated a trip to their sympathizing friends in Kansas; and in addition to this intelligence, by diligent inquiry, ascertained that the improper conversation of some, and downright advice of a few white men, had tended to induce these deluded Slaves to prove faithless to kind and indulgent masters, who have their temporal and spiritual welfare more at heart than the miserable and wicked fanatics that incite them to run away.

Several of the negroes implicated, being separately examined, charged one Martin Gallagher, an Irish laborer, with having advised them to seek for freedom, and that he pointed out to them the way to Kansas Territory, where they would be protected by the Abolitionists. Gallagher, when accused of his participation in the plot, admitted his guilt, and begged for mercy. He was ordered to leave the State by a certain day, and not to go to Kansas. In due time he left.

A preacher of the Northern Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Wylie, was accused of having promulgated publicly, Abolition sentiments, and his case became the care of our citizens, who assembled in a public meeting at the Court-House, on 27th of July, and appointed committees to investigate the charges.

After protracted and careful deliberation, it was considered that Rev. Mr. Wylie's sentiments savored too thoroughly of Abolitionism, and that in a public capacity he had made himself obnoxious to the serious charges alleged against him, and that it was necessary for the peace and harmony of the county that he leave the State. And therefore it was resolved, that Rev. Mr. Wylie be required to leave the State within seven days, with injunction not to go into the adjoining Territory.

Afterwards, on motion, a fund was raised to assist in defraying his traveling expenses; whereupon Mr. Wylie, who was present, consented to leave immediately. Mr. Wylie had a public hearing and was treated with gentlemanly politeness—and he acquiesced without a murmur in the wishes of the large concourse present.

We understand Mr. Wylie left forthwith.

A Narrow Escape—All for Love.

From a Pittsburg Paper.

A citizen of Brownstown, above Birmingham, leaped from the fourth column of the Monongahela Bridge into the River on Friday night, but being a good swimmer, reached the shore, safe and sound, at the foot of Market street. He gives the following statement: "He had been engaged to a female in Cleveland for sometime, when a few days ago he received a letter from his inamorata requesting him to hasten there, and she would name the happy day. He accordingly availed himself of the quickest means of transportation, to wit: the railroad, but, alas, upon reaching the house, he discovered that she had proved faithless, and was already married to another and more successful lover. Her double dealings preyed upon his mind, and being as rapidly whirled to the city as he had been taken away from it reached here on Friday, in a very mentally perturbed condition. That night, he stretched himself out at length, sorrowfully, upon the cold planks of the bridge, and fed his flame by the pale light of the stars—it (the flame) doubtless being more ardent in view of its total hopelessness—until sleep came over him like a mantle, not to give relief, for he carried his sorrow with him to dream-land. That feeling gradually yielded to the sternest one of revenge, and now, schemes of vengeance are rapidly formed, and plans to carry them into speedy execution are devised. At length he is successful—his rival is no more, but he has to fly for his life. The police are after him, they have reached the city, they are on the bridge, they are about to lay their hands upon him, when he desperately throws himself over into the water. Something like David Copperfield on his first 'drunk,' when he fell down stairs, he heard a splash, and on looking around, found it was caused by himself, and that he was then in the water. Dreaming was over, but we will not attempt to describe the feelings with which he viewed his position—partly ludicrous; from the sense of it, but decidedly serious, all the time, however, he struck out manfully for the shore, where he arrived safely, dripping wet, concluding doubtlessly, that

'Love is a dizziness.'"

Navy Officers Dead.—The Navy Department have advices of the death of Lieut. Wm. Decatur Hunter, U. S. N., who died on the 7th inst., at Mendham, N. J., and of Master Augustus Ford, U. S. N., aged 84, who died at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., on the 4th inst.—Norfolk Beacon, Aug. 14.

Thursday, Aug. 16—P. M.

The Stock Market, to-day, opened with renewed vigor, but closed rather tamely, though steadily. All the leading securities were pretty actively sought after during the early session of the Board; and in there was a stronger desire to buy than to sell, prices generally acquired increased firmness. The movements at the second meeting produced less interest. Much of the day's business was of a speculative character—a feature which is gradually becoming more evident, but one that is not apt to gain any great prominence, until all the shrewdest operators return from their Summer resorts. Meanwhile, we look for fair, though not heavy, transactions; and, should no unforeseen difficulty arise, a continuance of the prevalent firmness and buoyancy in prices of all good dividend paying securities. The tone of the latest foreign Commercial news is decidedly favorable; the harvest prospects are quite flattering; and the money market is in a very easy condition. These circumstances tend to promote the activity and steadiness now discernible in the market for stocks. State securities were in improved request at full rates. The sales of Railway Bonds embraced a large variety, but a smaller quantity. Illinois Central Bonds left off at 87½; Chicago and Rockland at 97½; New-York Central at 91½; New-York Central sevens at 103½; Erie 2d Mortgage at 100½ '63.; and Erie Bonds of 1875, at 91½ '63. The Bonds of the Hudson River and Harlem Companies were quiet, but steady. Panama Bonds, 2nd. issue, sold at 109. The private trade in sound Western Railroad Bonds is still progressing. Over $2,500,000 worth of such securities have—as we are informed, been successfully negotiated within a few days—probably more than half the amount being on foreign account. The particulars of the negotiations, however, have not transpired. There was more animation in Railway Shares to-day. New-York Central Shares were in good demand and firm, during the early session of the Board—but no transactions occurred therein at the afternoon meeting. Erie were likewise freely taken, without much change in value. Reading continued brisk and touched 69½ bid. In the shares of other Roads, the operations were to a moderate extent, mostly at somewhat stronger prices. Light fancy stocks were also in demand, but otherwise unaltered.

We have no changes in the Money Market to refer to. There is an abundance of unemployed capital available to responsible borrowers—but most parties seem to be in possession of as much money as they require for present use, and there is no great inclination to borrow means to speculate with; hence, the slack demand for accommodation which Banking institutions and private capitalists complain of; and hence, likewise, the low range of loan and discount rates, to wit.: 5@6 ⅌ cent. for the former, and 6@7 ⅌ cent. for the latter. The anticipated inquiry from the interior for money to move the new crop of breadstuffs to market, has not, so far, distinctly manifested itself. A slight diversion of coin to the West is spoken of, but it cannot be regarded as of much importance. The country people are rich enough to be able to get their own work through, without making any heavy calls upon us for material aid. It is only in the revival of general business, and the various enterprises which active trade generates and fosters, that there is now any hope for Money leaders to loan out their funds to advantage. Foreign Exchanges are unchanged. The Sub-Treasury balance, this afternoon, was $3,848,349; the day's receipts having been $129,072; and the payments, $105,538. The payments for the Assay Office reached but $12,774; and on Disbursing Checks, $42,844. The amount of Exchanges through the Clearing House to-day was $17,153,507; and balances, $1,066,165.

Mention was made in the Street to-day of the suspension of a second-class City Dry Goods Jobbing House, whose business transactions were chiefly with the South. The suspension was said to have occurred yesterday, and to have resulted from the inability of the firm to get enough goods on credit to meet the wants of its customers. It had purchased a considerable supply within the last week or ten days, but it was prepared to return most, if not all, of this. The suspension of the house in question was considered in itself a very trivial affair, but some timid persons dreaded that it would be made use of by certain slave-lists, in striving to create a panic, and that in this way it would acquire undue importance. We need not say we entertain no such fears. The pecuniary liabilities of the suspended house are not reliably known, but they are deemed comparatively insignificant and all well provided for. This is sufficient to deprive the affair of everything like a threatening aspect. It is also an isolated case, and cannot sensibly affect the good standing of any other respectable house. Hence, we are not afraid that the panic-makers can derive much aid from this suspension.

Michael Hoffman, Esq., has, we learn, been appointed Assistant Collector of this port, in place of Mr. Odell, resigned. In mentioning these changes in the Custom House, we may add that other and favorable changes have been made in the business arrangements of the same establishment. The warehousing and transportation entries, which were formerly separate, are now combined into one, thus saving the importer inconvenience and delay, which could not be avoided while two entries were necessary.

It is stated that the Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis has appointed a Committee of five of its members to endeavor to raise means for running the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, by paying off the indebtedness of the road along the route, amounting to about $60,000. This movement is in harmony with the late proceedings of the Company, giving Mr. Jenks a lease of the road, the terms of which we have already published.

A transposition occurred in the paragraph published in our last, relating to the earnings of the Mississippi and Milwaukee Railroad. The sentence recapitulating the aggregate earnings for the seven months of the present year, and for the same period last year, was accidentally placed before—instead of after—the statement of the earnings for July in each year.

A report is in circulation to the effect that another dividend may soon be expected—of perhaps 20 ⅌ cent.—upon the debts of Messrs. Page, Bacon & Co., upon which 60 ⅌ cent. have already been paid.

The Home Insurance Company has declared a dividend of 5 ⅌ cent., payable on demand.

Country Bank Redemptions.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I have read the various articles in relation to the Country Bank Clearing Agency, which have been published heretofore in your paper, and now ask the privilege, through its columns, of calling the attention of country Banks to some considerations connected with the plan, which have not been noticed so far as I have seen.

The Syracuse Committee have closed their labors, and communicated the result to the Banks in the form of twenty "Articles of Association," which they request the Banks to adopt without delay, and as it would seem, without asking any questions. Several of these articles are objectionable, and one or two of them to such a degree that I cannot conceive how a prudent Banker could think of subscribing to them.

The second article provides that balances shall be paid daily by the Debtor Banks through the Bank in the City of New-York, where they keep their accounts, on the draft or requisition of the Manager of the Agency. This gives the Manager the entire control of the whole City deposit of all the Banks who belong to the Association. If I subscribe to this article I am bound to instruct my City correspondent to pay the Manager drafts on my funds in his
